Wagner Bill Asks Housing Program Of $876,000,000

U. S. Would Back Authority's Bonds

Plan Is Drawn to Guard Interests of Private Builders.

By Felix Bruner.

Establishment of a permanent low-cost housing authority to spend and loan $876,000,000 during the next four years was provided in an Administration housing bill introduced yesterday by Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York. The bill is the result of months of conferences by Government housing authorities.

The program, which takes housing out of the category of relief, would be administered by a commission of five members, of which the Secretary of the Interior would be one. All activities of the housing division of the Public Works Administration, now administered by Secretary Ickes, would be transferred to the new board within 60 days after passage of the bill.

Could Build Demonstrations.

The board would be authorized to make grants up to 45 per cent of the cost of projects to State and municipal housing authorities and would be authorized to loan the remainder. Loans would run for a maximum of 60 years. Money from which the loans would be made after the first year would be secured from the sale of the authority's own bonds, bearing interest at not more than 4 per cent and guaranteed as to interest and principal by the Government.

While the measure contemplates that most building activities would be carried on by local authorities, the commission would be permitted to erect "demonstration" projects, which it must sell to local authorities or local co-operative organizations immediately after construction.

Wagner told the Senate the bill was so drawn as to guard against competition with private enterprise, in that it provides that houses built under its authority must be rented only to families with incomes so low that they cannot afford to rent privately constructed dwellings. He referred to the program as "the next step in our recovery drive."

"Industry Can't Do It."

The Housing Division of the Public Works Administration has constructed or has in process of construction 48 housing projects which would be turned over to the new organization, to be known officially as the United States Housing Authority, a new member of the New Deal's alphabetical agencies. Employes of the authority would be hired without reference to Civil Service or classification laws.

"Private industry," says the preamble of the bill, "alone has been and now is unable to overcome the

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 3.—Vera Stretz walked out of the courtroom free tonight when a jury acquitted her of slaying her suitor and former employer, Dr. Fritz Gebhardt.

The 32-year-old blonde stenographer stood pale and trembling at the counsel table as Judge Cornelius F. Collins asked the foreman of the jury to read the verdict.

When she heard the words "Not guilty" she swooned and had to be assisted to a chair by court attendants.

She had been on trial two weeks. The State charged she killed the former German financier in cold blood while he slept in his hotel room last November 12, because he "threw her over."

Miss Stretz pleaded that she shot him in self-defense after he lured her to his room on the pretext he was ill and attacked her.

The verdict was reached by the jury after three hours of deliberation.

Several women screamed and the handful of spectators who had remained to witness the climax of the sensational trial rose to their feet and applauded.

Miss Stretz, after the courtroom was cleared, left on the arm of her 70-year-old father, Frank Stretz, and went to the office of her attorney, Samuel S. Leibowitz, where she was interviewed. Her father was dabbing at his eyes with a handkerchief as he left.

Asked if she had any plans for the future, Miss Stretz replied with a sigh:

Wilson Jury Gives Myers Life Sentence

Pugh Defends Immunity 'Deal' With Cleary in Summation.

Courthouse, Rockville, Md., April 3.—Ernest Wellington Myers, putty-faced Baltimore gunman and racketeer, was found guilty of murder in the first degree, without capital punishment, by a jury of 12 men here late today.

Sentence of life imprisonment is, under Maryland law, mandatory, and Myers, who was convicted for the part he played in the "mistaken identity" slaying of Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route carrier, October 23, 1934, must spend the rest of his days in Maryland State Prison, at Baltimore.

The jury, composed of farmers, office workers and merchants, deliberated Myers' fate one hour and twenty minutes. The venire got the case at 3:45 p. m., and returned the verdict at 5:05 p. m.

Myers took the sentence stoically. When word flashed around this courthouse that the jury had reached a decision, the pallid defendant was ushered into the courtroom.

Raises Trembling Hand.

His hands strayed to the pockets of his powder-blue suit, and when the veniremen entered, he stood up and raised his right hand. It trembled slightly as Chief Justice Hammond Urner went through the formalities of asking the jury what it had decided.

Chief Judge Urner formally deferred sentence, which probably will be meted out next week.

Meanwhile Defense Counsel Samuel Levin, of Baltimore, and his associate, Barnard Welsh, announced they would seek a new trial.

The trial of Myers wrote finis to another chapter in Washington's bloody gambling wars. The bullets which killed Allen Wilson as he was about to deliver a morning newspaper at the home of Edward (Mickey) McDonald, were intended for McDonald, widely known gambler, himself.

With Myers disposed of, the prosecution will move into Allegany County and try, at Cumberland, April 13, two of his alleged accomplices, Albert Sutton and Albert McDermott, alias John (Slim) Dunn, for the Wilson murder.

Called 'Triggermen.'

McDermott and the late Anthony (Tony, the Stinger) Gugino were named "triggermen" in the bungled October slaying by William Cleary, admittedly an accomplice, who turned State's evidence.

When the verdict was announced today, Myers' wife, a patient, dark-haired woman, stifled a sob.

Myers immediately was taken to the Montgomery County Jail, atop this courthouse, to await sentencing. A look that might have been interpreted as slight relief crept over his face.

For the month preceding his trial here he has been kept in death row at the District Jail and the strain of it, his attorneys said, was one of the moving factors in making him waive his right to change of venue.

Throughout the three-day trial the State contended Myers drove the automobile in which Cugino, Claude Bailey, McDermott and Cleary rode to Takoma Park the night Wilson was mistaken for the jaunty McDonald and slain.

Closing moments of today's stormy session were occupied by State's Attorney James H. Pugh, who described Myers as the driver of the death car in which Myers, Albert McDermott, alias John "Slim" Dunn; Anthony (Tony The Stinger) Cugino; William Cleary and Claude Bailey rode to Takoma Park the gray October morning of the murder.

It was Myers, Pugh stated again

$30,000 Lower Marlboro Fire Razes Hall, 3 Other Buildings

Lower Marlboro, Md., April 3.—Fire, raging for almost two hours along the main street here, destroyed the town hall and three other buildings including the general store-postoffice and threatened for a time to raze this little town of 40 households.

Fire fighters were called out from nearby North Beach, Upper Marlboro, Galesville and Washington, some 60 miles away, to check the blaze which, fanned by the high wind, spread rapidly.

Aided by a shift in the direction of the wind, the combined forces of the four fire departments finally brought the blaze under control. Damage was estimated at $30,000.

The blaze started in a Main street house where Samuel J. Cox lived with his son, Melvin, his wife and three children. None of them was in the house at the time.

The fire, believed caused by a defective flue, spread rapidly to the Cox barn in the rear and to the general store-postoffice adjoining the home.

The blazing barn, half-filled with tobacco, raised billows of smoke which handicapped the fire-fighters in their efforts. From the barn the flames spread to the Town Hall, which is owned by the Patuxent local of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Not a single timber of the hall was left standing.

So rapidly did the hall go up in smoke that nothing in the building could be saved. Among the items destroyed was the furniture of John Jackson, who, a year ago, had his home burned, and had been storing part of his furniture in the hall.

Three other homes nearby were reached by the flames, two only slightly. The home of Thomas J. Younger, chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Calvert County, was damaged considerably.

Paris Prepares To Give Nazi Case to League

By The Associated Press.

Paris, April 3.—France may attempt to throw the whole German problem back into the lap of the League of Nations, it was authoritatively indicated tonight.

Premier Albert Sarraut, Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin and the ambassadors to Berlin, London, Rome and Brussels, along with foreign office experts, spent the afternoon debating a method of untangling the snarl.

A belief that France would get nowhere with the other Locarno signatories because of strong British opinion, described as one of "negotiation at any price," was held responsible for the suggestion that the League take over the problem.

Opportunity also would be given at Geneva for France's Little Entente and Russian allies to discuss Adolf Hitler's security plan on an equal footing with the Locarno powers.

The League, it was said, would be asked to recognize Hitler's refusal of the program submitted by the Locarno powers March 19 and, as is provided in the Locarno treaty, to "formulate necessary measures" to re-establish "respect" for international law, which France insists must precede negotiations for security pacts.

The League Council formally condemned Germany for violating the Locarno and Versailles treaties recently in London and then adjourned, leaving the problem in the hands of Britain, France, Belgium and Italy.

In connection with the League, officials said it was "possible" France might try to persuade Great Britain that Geneva should lift its sanctions against Italy in order to prepare for possible sanctions against Germany.

France still wants the Locarno powers to meet next week, however, it was said, in order to get the agreement of Britain, Belgium and Italy to her own peace plan, which the League is to receive.

The government, it was said semi-officially, is considering a plan to "bottle up Hitler securely" and to provide a "test of his good intentions."

Each European nation would be asked to sign mutual assistance pacts with every other nation and a definition of aggression as "any crossing of a frontier" would be inserted in the League Covenant.

By this means, informed circles said, Germany would be forced to give guarantees to all her neighbors, rather than only to France and Belgium, as was enumerated in Hitler's proposals. A refusal to sign with even one nation would "expose to the world the Reich's real intentions," it was said.

Wife Locks Herself in Room, Cries: 'They've Murdered Him'

Anna Hauptmann, Hearing Shouts of Newsboys, Writhes on Floor, Then Goes in Hiding; Minister Persuades Her to Reappear.

By the United Press.

Trenton, N. J., April 3.—Mrs. Anna Hauptmann became hysterical tonight when she heard word of her husband's death. She broke away from friends watching her in her hotel room and locked herself in the bathroom.

From her room on the eighth floor of the Hotel Stacy-Trent could be heard the cry of newsboys shouting extras that "Bruno is dead."

She had lain prostrate on the bed when word of the execution came.

Mrs. Hauptmann, her hair disorderly, screamed.

"Oh, my God!" she shouted. "Oh, why did you do this to him!"

Dr. William Collier tried to administer to her. She pushed him away, screaming:

"They've killed him! They've murdered him!"

Suddenly she leaped from the bed and writhed on the floor. Her friends tried to lift her. She broke away, dashed into the bathroom and locked the door.

Previously, as a precautionary measure, the bathroom had been cleared of all glass and towels.

Ten minutes later, the Rev. Dr. John Matthiesen, one of her husband's spiritual advisers, arrived from the prison. He went to the door of the bathroom and spoke quietly. Finally, she opened the door.

The minister finally succeeded in quieting her.

Mrs. Hauptmann had made a futile, eleventh-hour effort to save her husband by swearing out a warrant charging Paul H. Wendel, disbarred attorney, with the crime.

She rushed to Hunterdon County, where Hauptmann was tried, and obtained the warrant. It was brought to the county jail here where Wendel is held. Officers refused to surrender him. The warrant was left as a "detainer."

Ravaged Cities Find 40 Dead From Storms

By the Associated Press.

Greensboro, N. C., April 3.—Two storm-ravaged cities and a number of smaller communities made burial plans tonight for 40 dead left amid millions of dollars damage by wind storms that flicked Florida and Alabama before descending full force on Georgia and the Carolinas yesterday and last night.

Eighteen persons were killed at Cordele, Ga., yesterday morning, 12 hours before a roaring twister ripped open a 2½-mile business, industrial and residential section here, leaving 12 dead.

Between the Cordele and Greensboro storms, four lower South Carolina counties were struck and one man was killed.

Lightning previously had killed one person at Appalachicola, Fla., and another died in a storm at Gordo, Ala.

Georgia reported 25 dead after storms struck at numerous small communities over the State.

Cordele, a town of 7,000 population, listed nearly 500 injured and $1,250,000 property damage as national guardsmen helped clear away wreckage principally in the business district.

Damage here was set at $1,500,000.

Concord, N. C., also was extensively damaged by high winds, as were Allendale, Hampton, Barnwell and Colleton counties in South Carolina.

Three persons were burned to death here as fires started after the twister struck at dusk. One died of a heart attack. The others apparently were crushed as buildings tumbled, houses crashed and trees and light poles fell crazily across streets and were thrown through walls of homes.

New Reprieve Order Drawn, Never Signed

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, April 3.—Just how near Bruno Richard Hauptmann came tonight to getting another reprieve was evidenced, an authoritative source disclosed, by preparation of an order of postponement.

Gov. Hoffman never signed the order.

While the Governor conferred with Attorney General Wilentz on the possibility of a second reprieve late today, a reprieve order was drawn.

After two hours' discussion with Wilentz, the Governor determined that he lacked the legal authority to delay the death penalty longer.

Leaving the Statehouse tonight, after the execution Hoffman showed irritation at efforts to question him and struck one man.

The crowd waited more than two hours in the brisk spring night outside the side exit from the Governor's office. When he emerged he strode quickly across the flower beds of the Statehouse lawn to the concrete walk to the street.

He refused to answer questions and when one man persisted at his

Hoffman Dispels Hope of Reprieve Before Deadline

German, Chalky White, Attempts to Grin, Then Goes to Death, His Lips Locked on Mystery of Case.

SIX DOCTORS PRONOUNCE HIM LIFELESS AT 8:47:30 O'CLOCK

Governor's Announcement at 7:30 That He Would Not Grant Stay Climaxes Day of Rumors to Contrary.

By Edward T. Folliard,
A Staff Correspondent.

State Prison, Trenton, N. J., April 3.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann died in the electric chair here tonight.

He died without uttering a word.

He had promised to "die like a man." History must credit him with a pitiful attempt to make good on that promise. He even smiled, a frightful, never-to-be-forgotten smile.

To this reporter, the former German machine gunner looked like a soldier about to have an enemy bayonet plunged into his stomach, and knowing it would do no good to cry "Kamerad."

It was 47 and one-half minutes after 8 o'clock when Dr. Howard Weisler, the last of six physicians who applied their stethoscopes to Hauptmann's heart, turned to the witnesses in the death house and announced in a loud voice:

"This man is dead."

Bruno Richard Hauptmann had atoned for a crime that shocked the civilized world—the kidnaping and murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., the night of March 1, 1932.

Hauptmann, whose life was twice spared after his conviction for the murder, clung desperately tonight to the hope of another reprieve.

Not until 7:30 p. m. did Gov. Harold G. Hoffman announce that there would be no reprieve.

Ghastly In Appearance.

As he entered, his slit pants legs flapping, his little darting eyes swept the witnesses. It was then that he tried to make good on that promise to "die like a man."

He tried to smile.

It was as if he were saying:

"See, remember what I told you. Didn't I tell you I had more courage than my accusers?"

But it wasn't really a smile, for to smile your eyes must be in tune with your lips. And Hauptmann's eyes couldn't smile; there was too much agony in them.

The Rev. John Matthiesen, Lutheran clergyman, was praying in German as he preceded Hauptmann into the death chamber.

"Der Erste und der Letzte," he droned. (The first and the last.)

It was the only sound in the chamber.

Hauptmann saw Col. Mark O. Kimberling, principal keeper of the State Prison, and some of the witnesses thought that he lunged toward him.

Last Chance to End Mystery.

Here was Hauptmann's chance to talk. It was the moment when he was expected to talk—when reporters had their pencils poised to catch his words, words that would end forever the controversy as to whether he snatched that little child from its crib in the Sourland Mountains.

No words came. There was only that dazed look—that look of the soldier about to get the bayonet, and knowing that nothing could save him.

Ae reporter nearby recalled the words of Attorney General David T. Wilentz at the Flemington trial.

"He's cold—that man. But when he hears that switch—then he will thaw out."

Elliott, whose electric chair victims include Ruth Snyder and a host of other criminal celebrities, clamped the electrode down on Hauptmann's shaven head.

A moment later, an assistant strapped a mask over those agony-filled eyes. Then he applied an electrode to the bare leg.

Hauptmann now was ready.

'Windfall' Tax To Ruin Them, Avow Packers

Committee Is Told Larger Firms Then Would Have Clear Field.

By Robert C. Albright.

Claiming Supreme Court invalidation of AAA saved their business from destruction, a representative group of small meat packers yesterday told the Ways and Means Committee the proposed "windfall" tax will complete their ruin, and leave the field to the large packing houses.

In the first concerted attack on the Administration's plan to impose a 90 per cent tax on Supreme Court refunds of $180,000,000 in processing levies, small packers, employing between 150 and 250 persons, said the "windfall" assessment will force many to liquidate.

The development coincided with a plea for tax relief by debt-ridden railroads, fresh denunciation of the bill by independent business concerns, and a statement by the American Liberty League labeling the tax program as "a definite end of the 'breathing spell'" for business, and upsetting to "any calculations which business may have made on the basis of expected relief from experimentation."

Meanwhile, steady hammering by businesses with heavy indebtedness, claiming forced dividend payments under the tax program would pile up a top-heavy rebt structure, appeared to have left an impression on the committee. There was growing sentiment for modifying the bill in this respect by substituting a more moderate flat rate on companies forced to retain earnings to pay debts.

Conclusion Expected.

The Ways and Means Committee was nearing the end of its tax hearings, which may be brought to conclusion today or Monday. Chairman Robert L. Doughton said the final draft may be ready for the House floor by Tuesday, April 14. Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee said his group will open tax hearings shortly before that date and seek to terminate them speedily. Although Harrison plans to "consider" imposition of $221,000,000 in processing taxes discarded by the House group, forecasts were general on that side of the Capitol that the Senate will not accept them.

Amid Republican charges that he was a Treasury "lobbyist," David Stock, a New York lawyer, the second witness to support the Administration's tax program, defended the committee's proposals and declared the "business life of the country will quickly adjust itself to this new tax."

Stock admitted the Treasury had invited him to appear after he had written a letter to a radio commentator commending the proposed taxes. He remained silent when Representative Daniel A. Reed (Republican), New York, asked him if he was not a "Treasury lobbyist."

Appearing for the Association of American Railroads, R. V. Fletcher, general counsel, said the railroads not only were burdened by Federal rate and accounting regulations, but their taxes increased from 13.1 per cent of net income in 1916 to 32 per cent in 1935.

Fletcher asked the committee to permit the railroads to deduct from taxable earnings up to 1 per cent of total debt obligations, to be applied to sinking funds under mortgages, deeds of trust, or other contracts, or used to retire funded debt.

In computing its tax, Fletcher said a railroad should also be permitted to deduct amounts paid to the Government in reduction of loans, expenditures chargeable to capital account made on order of public agencies, and amounts required under reorganization plans to be invested in additions and betterments before payment of interest on new bonds.

Argues for Railroads.

Pointing out that the committee already had provided favored treatment for banks and insurance companies, Fletcher argued railroads likewise are netitled to special consideration, because of their financial condition and peculiar public relationship.

The American Liberty League issued its statement on "the President's 1936 tax proposals" in pamphlet form, and made no appearance before the Ways and Means committee.

"Whatever may have been the intentions of the President when he promised a 'breathing spell,'" said the League, "the presentation of his tax program with its far-reaching implications has been highly disturbing and has served to upset any calculations which business may have made on the basis of expected relief from experimentation.

"Entirely new methods of taxing corporations will create complications and uncertainties tending to check the upward movement in business which gained substantial impetus following the Supreme Court's adverse decision in the NRA case and which was further encouraged by the court's invalidation of regulatory devices employed in the AAA."

The proposed tax on undistributed profits, the league said, is designed to force spending in lieu of saving, and is "part and parcel of theories already discredited in New Deal experiments."

Small packers protesting the proposed "windfall" tax at yesterday's hearings included T. W. Taliaferro, of Hammond, Standish & Co., Detroit; Carl Wilhener, of the Henry Burkhart Packing Co., Dayton, Ohio; F. E. Werneke, of the Louisville Provision Co., Louisville, Ky.; Chester G. Newcomb, Lake Erie Provision Co., Cleveland, Ohio; and E. L. Schneider, Ohio Provision Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

"If Congress passes the 'windfall' tax we will have to liquidate and go out of business," Taliaferro told the committee, whose testimony was typical of others in the group.

He denied the processing tax had been passed on to consumers in most cases, said it would be administratively impossible to prove that it had, and stated the processors were legally entitled to return of money paid out in an illegal tax.

When committeemen asked him if he thought the processors were entitled to return of the money, Taliaferro countered with a question:

"Do you think the Government is entitled to this money if it comes from a tax illegally imposed."

Democratic committeemen took the view that if there was doubt, the Government should get the tax money.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, both Minority Leader Charles L. McNary, and Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, a member of the Finance Committee, expressed doubt that the Senate will approve the new processing taxes discarded by the House group.

Democratic Finance Committee members were reluctant to comment, but Senator Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut, and Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, expressed opposition to excessive levies on corporate earnings. Lonergan said numerous business concerns in Connecticut have written him expressing opposition to the principle of the tax. Copeland warned that mills crippled by recent floods would have difficulty in recouping if heavy earnings taxes are imposed.

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, Democratic whip, said he would press for taxation of tax-exempt securities, which he declared preferable to re-enactment of processing taxes.

Parlor Car Travelers Condemn Roosevelt; Many Doubt He Can Be Beaten.

By Franklyn Waltman

EN ROUTE TO MIDDLE WEST, April 3.—One sign of returning prosperity is the increase in the number of persons traveling. The railroads are not overloaded, yet it is no longer wise to defer making reservations for sleeping accommodations. If you do, you may have to take an upper berth.

WALTMAN

Another sign that recovery is on the way—that America has been successful in fighting its way out of depression—is that your traveling companions talk about subjects other than politics and how everything is going to pot. Indeed, most travelers—I speak of those in pullmans—think things are coming along nicely.

When discussion turns to politics, sharp, bitter feeling toward President Roosevelt is evidenced—yet many of those hostile to the New Deal seem in doubt whether the Republicans can win this year. The farther West one travels the more frequently this doubt is encountered, even among stanch Republicans.

* * *

A Western public utility man, who said he would do anything within reason to bring about the President's defeat this year, doubted whether it were possible. He said he was amazed at the number of small businessmen, mostly Republicans, that he knew who were going to vote the Roosevelt ticket this year. It was because they were doing the best business in five or six years, he said.

Being bribed with their own money, they do not seem to be bothered by future taxation to pay for New Deal experiments, he said sorrowfully.

Another in the lounge car group said he had had similar experiences and that after all, were it not for the way he did things, Roosevelt was not such a bad President. Everyone knew we had to take care of the unemployed and that waste was to be expected, he said. But why did the President have to characterize every successful man as a crook or greedy reactionary, he asked. And why did he let Rexford Tugwell run around the country scaring everyone with his communistic schemes?

* * *

It was the type of conversation that can be heard in any lounging car. It recalled the story of the pullman porter who told President Roosevelt that while he heard a "great deal of grumbling against New Deal in pullmans, folks in day coaches are still for you."

More interesting, because it was new, was the cheerfulness of most of those traveling—and their comment that rosy days lie ahead.

An Eastern lawyer contended that if all the unemployed were put back to work, this country would enjoy a rise in its standard of living for everyone which would make 1929 fade into insignificance. He conceded that his "if" was an important one, but added that it could be done if Federal bureaucracy were taken off the country's back and the New Deal did not everlastingly seek to retard recovery.

* * *

Outside windows of the speeding train were factories of Gary, Ind., belching forth clouds of smoke—an engine shifted long lines of freight cars about—overalled men could be seen working in shops—also there could be seen literally thousands of shiny automobiles parked in front of shops and factories.

"Doesn't look so bad," observed my neighbor. "Somebody owns those automobiles."

Here and there, however, was a building with smokeless chimneys. Now and then there flashed by a group of dilapidated shanties, whose occupants do not own automobiles—if they have enough to eat.

* * *

What does the picture prove? Is America coming back? The Chicago newspapers come aboard. One financial page reports that, according to Iron Age, trade paper of the steel industry, steel production is up 4½ points, reaching 62½ per cent of capacity—the highest level since June, 1930.

Another item predicts the April output of automobiles will reach 500,000, which is better than normal. Farm income for January and February is estimated by the National City Bank at $1,027,000,000—and only $1,000,000 of the sum contributed by AAA, says another item. This compares with $974,000,000 farm income in the same period of last year, including $122,000,000 contributed by AAA.

Sears, Roebuck, mail order house, according to another newspaper, reports "We have broken all sales records for this, the second, period of our 1936 fiscal year—even 1929 is surpassed—sales volume up 17 per cent over same period last year."

* * *

Snow is beginning to fall outside. A grain market report records that prediction of rain and snow sent wheat prices down several cents a bushel. Nevertheless the Southwest wants rain and snow. Kansans contend the ground still lacks sufficient moisture for a good crop, as witness duststorm of some days back. A heavy snowfall brings joy in Kansas—it may mean the difference between buying a new car or going on relief next summer. But big crop means low price, I observe. We'll take the big crop—we're not afraid to work, says a Kansas farmer.

* * *

Washington but 30 hours away—10 by airplane—seems very remote. Fewer seem interested in what is happening there. More are interested in their own affairs. Washington is slowly fading as the rising sun of the Nation's salvation. Gary steel factories and Kansas wheat fields are now more important.

A. T. & T. Race Wire Services Studied by U. S.

Department of Justice Aid Examines Files; Curb by Law Hinted.

A Department of Justice agent is studying files of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in New York, as a result of revelations of the use of the company's wires by racing news services and allegedly by "gamblers and pool room operators," it was learned last night.

These revelations, made by direct examination of telephone company officials on the witness stand several weeks ago in the investigation by the Federal Communications Commission of the $5,000,000,000 telephone monopoly, were shown in documents from A. T. & T. files introduced by Samuel Becker, special G. C. C. counsel, and identified by company men.

Commissioner Paul Walker, directing the fact-finding investigation, called the circumstances to the attention of the Department of Justice. It has been understood from sources close to the commission that proposals to limit the use of the company's services for the dissemination of racing information are being studied.

Department officials began study of the evidence shown, and then dispatched a Federal agent to New York to work with the F. C. C. investigators. It was not known whether any existing Federal law can be applied to the situation. The belief exists in informed quarters that the Commission may ask new and more direct regulatory powers as a result of the repeated manifestations of the fact that almost the only safeguards of the public against A. T. & T. actions lie in the "wisdom and integrity" of company officials.

Doesn't Want Illegal Business.

Walter S. Gifford, urbane president of the telephone company, throughout the hearing has stressed the fact that the company "does not want illegal business." He has said "We would like to get rid of it," and that "it would be a great blessing" if a definite ruling or law to prevent illegal use of the company's services could be obtained.

At the same time Gifford admitted considerable doubt that any means of regulating this type of business could be found. He stated that the company would naturally refuse to set up any espionage system on its customers.

At the same time he confessed nearly complete ignorance of the extent or importance of the leased-wire services' income to the telephone company, professing surprise that the racing-news bureaus used it so extensively, but adding that in a business such as the AT&T, where the company's consolidated revenues yearly total approximately $1,000,000,000, a half-million dollar section of the business was "a very small part," and thus, in his opinion, of negligible importance.

Revenues to the company from racing news services totaled $573,446 last year, it was shown. It was also shown in the evidence introduced that on occasions local telephone company officials had cooperated with known gamblers who used teletypewriter machines to reestablish the racing news service for them under different names at different addresses even after their gambling establishments had been raided and the proprietors convicted.

Diplomatic Shift Is Due at Vatican

Vatican City, April 3 (AP).—Prelates said today a major shakeup in the Vatican diplomatic service would be forthcoming soon.

Pope Pius XI was reported going over a list of a number of new appointees to some of the most important posts in the church's highly efficient foreign service.

Most of the new appointments would be caused, the prelates said, by the fact that the present occupants of the diplomatic posts had been named cardinals. They will be recalled to Rome shortly to be given the red hat and will remain here.

Among the posts to be filled are those at Paris, where Cardinal Luigi Maglione is now papal nuncio; Vienna, where Cardinal Sibilia is nuncio; Madrid, where Cardinal Federico Tedeschini is nuncio, and Warsaw, where Cardinal Francesco Marmaggi is nuncio.

Brazil Police Deny Torture of Barron

Rio de Janeiro, April 3 (AP).—The police department, in reply to charges made in the American House of Representatives by Representative Marcantonio, announced today it would throw open for public inspection all official documents relating to the death of Victor A. Barron.

"We also will give all facilities to allow interested persons to question all functionaries and physicians who had a part in the Barron case," a high police official said.

"We will lift the censorship to permit absolute clarification."

It was understood the police have taken this method of denying Representative Marcantonio's accusation that Barron was tortured and killed by police.

Troops Protect Marland From Writs in Oil Fight

Oklahoma City, April 3 (AP).—The long-threatened "troops" in Oklahoma's oil war materialized today.

Two uniformed National Guardsmen stood at the door of the State Senate chamber to prevent service of court writs on Gov. E. W. Marland, while the Board of Affairs opened bids for oil and gas contracts on disputed State tracts.

The Governor said contracts will be withheld, however, until it is determined what decision is made on an Oklahoma County District Court restraining order against development of the State lands.

Oklahoma City has refused to zone the State land for drilling and Marland has expressed concern lest nearby wells drain the oil deposits.

Roosevelt Gets Mail; Fishing Jaunt Delayed

Miami, Fla., April 3 (AP).—President Roosevelt received a new bundle of mail this afternoon and put off his fishing until late today to go over his correspondence.

The arrival of the mail was reported, but Mr. Roosevelt deferred a report of the day's activities until after the late fishing trip.

Fascists Reach British Sphere Of Lake Tana

By the Associated Press.

Rome, April 3.—Premier Mussolini's black-shirted soldiers halted their march across western Ethiopia tonight at the shores of Lake Tana, where the headwaters of the Blue Nile rise amid British power interests.

Despite the presence of his troops in the vicinity, officials reaffirmed the Italian premier's guarantee not to harm the British holdings.

"The treaty of 1906 * * * has recognized to Great Britain the right of regulation of waters of Lake Tana, the Blue Nile and its affluents. * * * Those which are the British right remain and will remain in the whole integrity of British right."

Completion of the march to the inland lake was accomplished after occupation of the city of Gondar, 30 miles north.

An official report from Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italian commander on the northern frontier, described "systemizing" operations now in progress after the latest reported Fascist victory over Emperor Haile Selassie's personal troops.

"In the Lake Ashangi sector the enemy are retiring to the south, pursued by our troops and bombarded by aviation. The Third Eritrean Brigade, commanded by Gen. Cubeddu, joined Starace's (Lieut. Gen. Achille Starace) column, which is systemizing the Condar region," Marshal Badoglio wirelessed.

"Nothing new in Somaliland," he added.

The Milan newspaper added an assurance to its reaffirmation that waters of Lake Tana and the Blue Nile would not be deviated to provide Itwy with cotton-growing land in the region and toward the Red Sea. Such a feat could not be accomplished, the paper asserted, because of mountains 2,000 to 3,000 meters high blocking the way.

9 Puerto Ricans Indicted for Plot

San Juan, Puerto Rico, April 3 (AP).—Nine Nationalists, including Pedro Alzibu Campos, party president, were indicted by a grand jury which reported to Judge Robert Cooper today.

The Nationalists are charged with conspiracy to incite insurrection against the United States, to overthrow the authority of the United States on the island, and to recruit an army against the United States.

All defendants were ordered by Judge Cooper to appear Tuesday to enter pleas.

Standley Urges 2 Battleships In '37 Program

Replacement Building Plan Also Would Include Light Cruisers.

The Acting Secretary of the Navy, Admiral William H. Standley, yesterday urged the beginning of construction of two new battleships next year as "replacements" at a cost of from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 for the first year's work.

Admiral Standley, acting as Secretary by virtue of his rank while Secretary Claude A. Swanson is still seriously ill in the Naval Hospital here, told newsmen he hoped Congress would appropriate sufficient funds to allow construction work to begin early in 1937.

The chief of Naval Operations, reaching Washington late Thursday with Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador at Large, after their recent attendance at the London Naval Conference, spent a considerable portion of his first day at home in conference with State Department officials, including Secretary Cordell Hull and Undersecretary William Phillips.

The top-ranking admiral said:

"I think we should begin the construction of replacement battleships as soon as possible. The British Admiralty has already received authority and money to begin building two new battleships in 1937 after the Washington and London limitation treaties expire.

"There is every reason that we should do the same."

Besides the two 35,000-ton vessels Admiral Standley also advised that the United States Navy revise its program of building to provide for the construction of two or three light cruisers during the next five years, since the British intend to jump their cruiser strength to 70 next year.

Davis and Standley both pointed out the lack of limitation on future fleet sizes as a result of the new treaty agreed on by American, British and French conferees at London last month. They stated however, that the clarification of the atmosphere incident to Japan's denunciation of the original Washington and London agreements, and in relieving the somewhat suspicious attitude among the big naval powers, made the new agreement valuable.

The time of the presentation of the new naval agreement to the Senate for ratification will be up to President Roosevelt, indicated Secretary Hull at his press conference. Davis, also present, said that the new treaty represented "more than we dared hope for" as newsmen recalled the gloomy forecasts of complete failure made when the American representatives sailed for London last December.

New Clipper Ship Arrives at Miami

Miami, Fla., April 3 (AP).—The new 26-ton Hawaiian Clipper, world's largest commercial airliner, landed at 3:20 p. m. (Eastern Standard Time) today on Biscayne Bay, completing a 1,050-mile flight here from Baltimore.

The great flying boat, 1,000 pounds heavier than her sister craft, the trail-blazing China and Philippine clippers, left the factory of her builders, the Glenn L. Martin Co., in suburban Middle River, Md., at 7:45 a. m.

The transpacific veteran, Capt. Edwin C. Musick, was at the controls of the new ship. Three passengers and five crewmen also were aboard.

London's Stand Toward Berlin, Rome Stiffens

May Ask Oil Sanctions at Showdown Planned for Next Week.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 3.—A stiffening of Great Britain's attitude toward both Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini was disclosed in government quarters tonight on the heels of completion of arrangements to open military staff talks with the French and the Belgians in London next week.

These developments followed a point-blank German refusal to promise not to fortify the Rhineland, even temporarily, delivered to the British government earlier today.

The German note arrived at the Foreign Office shortly before Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, went ot the House of Commons to announce that Great Britain, France, and Belgium were ready to fight as Allies if attacked by Germany, but that the British government was anxious to discuss permanent peace proposals with Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

It was understood that the final answer was delivered to Eden by Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's special ambassador, in a 5-minute talk just before Eden went to the House of Commons to outline the conditions under which Anglo-French-Belgian general staffs will confer in London.

An authoritative source said that despite repeated urging by Eden, Von Ribbentrop told him that Hitler said Germany was unable to make any "contribution" with respect to fortifications.

While two government party speakers directed slashing attacks against Germany, it was disclosed the government is pressing for a meeting of the League of Nations' Committee of Thirteen next week for a showdown on the Italian war in Africa.

An authoritative source said Britain, angered by what was called proof the Italians have been using poison gas, would urge an oil embargo against Italy if the League committee finds Premier Mussolini is unwilling to discuss peace terms.

The Marquess of Zetland, secretary of state for India, speaking at Manchester, and Lord Eustace Percy, who resigned earlier this week as minister without portfolio, at Eastbourne, minced no words in criticizing Hitler and German militarism.

Foreign Office View.

The fact that the marquess' speech reflected the foreign office viewpoint was not denied at Whitehall, where the text was made public.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, in a more moderate speech in the House of Commons, disclosed the restrictions under which the military staff talks will be held.

Authoritative quarters said Eden met a stone wall in trying to induce Von Ribbentrop to modify the terms of Hitler's counterproposals, delivered Wednesday, and may even have broken off further talks with the German envoy.

The foreign office said while Von Ribbentrop is remaining in London for a few days, Eden has made no arrangements to see him. Hitler has refused to make a single modification of the terms whereby he is willing to negotiate for security.

Eden said he told Von Ribbentrop that he considered Hitler's proposals most important and deserving of careful study, "which we now intend to give them."

Lamson Is Freed After Third Trial

San Jose, Calif., April 3 (AP).—Almost a stranger to his own daughter, David A. Lamson walked to freedom today after nearly three years in jail, once occupying a death cell as the condemned slayer of his pretty wife.

The baffling "bath tub" case—it was the subject of three trials—was dismissed by the prosecutor without exonerating the former Stanford University Press executive.

Once sentenced to hang after being convicted of bludgeoning his brunette wife, Allene, with an iron pipe at their Stanford campus home, the elated Lamson had to be "introduced" to his 5-year-old daughter, Allene Genevieve.

House Unit Acts to Aid Gettysburg Celebration

A House Military Affairs subcommittee approved a resolution yesterday creating a national commission to co-operate in celebrating the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The affair in 1938 will be the first official reunion of the Blue and Gray.

Paul L. Roy, secretary of the Pennsylvania State Commission for Observance of the Gettysburg Anniversary, told the committee between 2,000 and 3,000 survivors of the battle are expected to attend.

Hauptmann Trial Fair, Asserts Ex-Gov. Moore

By the Associated Press.

Senator Moore, of New Jersey, who was Governor of the State during the Lindbergh kidnaping and early investigation of the crime, expressed the view last night that justice had been done by the execution of Richard Hauptmann.

After Hauptmann's death, Moore said:

"I believe that the verdict was fully justified. He had absolutely a fair trial before one of the fairest and most capable justices in the United States."

Texts of Allies' Notes

London, April 3.—The text of the identical letters given to the French and Belgian ambassadors by Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, follows:

I have the honor to hand herewith to your excellency the letter contemplated in the text of the proposals drawn up March 19 by the representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom of Britain and Northern Ireland, and Italy.

Your excellency will appreciate that the delivery of this letter in no way implies that, in the view of His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom, the effort at conciliation referred to in this letter has failed.

As you are aware, we have today received from the German government certain proposals which we have communicated to your government and to which we are giving our immediate consideration.

Meanwhile, His Majesty's government is willing, in accordance with paragraph three of the proposals, to instruct their general staffs forthwith to enter into contact with the (French or Belgian) general staff with a view to arranging the technical conditions in which the obligations referred to in that paragraph should be carried out in case of unprovoked aggression.

No Political Commitment.

On behalf of His Majesty's government, I have the honor to state that it is understood that this contract between the general staffs cannot give rise, in respect to either government, to any political undertaking nor to any obligation regarding the organization of national defense. I will be glad to have your excellency's confirmation that this likewise is the understanding of your government.

His Majesty's government propose that conversations between the general staffs of the two countries, necessary for establishing the contacts in question, should be begun in London.

I am addressing a similar letter to the Belgian (or French) ambassador.

Locarno Letter Text.

The identical text of the second letters from Eden to the French and Belgian ambassadors, specifying commitments under the Locarno Treaty, follows:

With reference to "the text of proposals drawn up by the representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom of Britain and Northern Ireland, and Italy," dated March 19, 1936, I am authorized to give you official assurance that, if the effort at conciliation attempted in the arrangement there proposed should fail, His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom—

1. (a) Will at once consider, in consultation with your government and the Belgian (or French government), the steps to be taken to meet the new situation thus created;

(b) Will immediately come to the assistance of your government, in accordance with the Treaty of Locarno, in respect to any measures which shall jointly be decided upon;

Security Pledge.

(c) Will, in return for reciprocal assurances from your government, take, in consultation with your government, all practical measures available to His Majesty's government for the purpose of insuring the security of your country against unprovoked aggression;

(d) Will, for this purpose, establish or continue to contact between the general staffs of our two countries contemplated in paragraph three of the said arrangement;

And furthermore will subsequently endeavor at the Council of the League of Nations to secure the formulation by the latter of all useful recommendations for the maintenance of peace and for respect for international law.

Text of French Reply.

Mr. Secretary of State:

Referring to the text of the dispositions set down by the representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and North Ireland, and Italy, on March 19, 1936, your excellency has given me official assurance that if efforts for conciliation made in the arrangement thus proposed should fail, His Majesty in the United Kingdom:

(a) Will immediately examine in consultation with my government and the Belgian government measures to be taken to meet the new situation thus created;

(b) Will come immediately to the aid of my government, in accordance with the Treaty of Locarno, by means of all measures taken in common accord;

(c) Will take in exchange for reciprocal assurances from my government all practical measures within his power to insure the security of my country against unprovoked aggression.

(d) Toward this end he will undertake and continue contacts between the general staffs of our two countries provided for in paragraph three of the second section of the aforementioned agreement: Furthermore he seeks to have the League of Nations Council formulate all recommendations believed useful for the maintenance of peace and respect on international law.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication and simultaneously to submit to you in the name of the government of the republic and to the profit of the United Kingdom and Ireland the reciprocal assurance provided for under paragraph "C" of your letter.

(Signed) CHARLES CORBIN.

Non-Political Pledge Text.

Mr. Secretary of State:

Your letter of April 1 informs me that his Majesty's government, according to paragraph three in the text of the dispositions set down in London on March 19 by the representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom of Britain and North Ireland, and Italy, is ready to instruct its general staff to enter into contact with the representatives of the French general staff in order to fix the technical conditions for the execution of the obligations envisaged in case of unprovoked aggression.

In the name of the government of the republic I have the honor of informing your Excellency that it is understood between our two governments that such a contact cannot create any political engagement or any obligation as to the organization of the national defense of either one of the interested parties.

My government agrees that the conversations in question should take place in London.

(Signed) CHARLES CORBIN.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of today's date regarding the contact to be established between the British and Belgian general staffs in accordance with paragraph III of the text proposals drawn up in London March 19, 1936, by the representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom of Britain and Northern Ireland and Italy.

I am instructed by my government to put on record their agreement with the contemplated procedure and to confirm that it is understood that this contact cannot give rise, in respect to either government, to any political undertaking nor to any obligation regarding the organization of national defense.

Embassy Withholds Execution Comment

By the Associated Press.

The German embassy had no comment on the execution last night of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, a German subject.

Officials, saying that it was a criminal case under the sole jurisdiction of American authorities, declined to discuss the fate of the convicted Lindbergh baby slayer in any way.

The embassy has taken no action in the case, although the German consul in New York satisfied himself at the time of Hauptmann's arrest that Hauptmann was accorded the same rights under the law as an American citizen would have received.

Memorial Held For Dr. Wilmer At Cathedral

Present were many of the distinguished doctor's former patients and numerous physicians and nurses with whom he was associated here and in Baltimore. Survivors sat in special seats.

Canon G. Freeland Peter, of the Cathedral staff, and Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, also participated.

Choir Provides Music.

Music was furnished by the Cathedral choir of men and boys, directed by Robert G. Barrow.

"Dr. Wilmer," Freeman said, "was a great physician and surgeon, a scholar and a high-minded Christian gentleman.

"He won his host of friends not only by his exceptional skill but by the sterling qualities of his fine character.

"It is most fitting that his body should find sepulture in the Cathedral he so long served. He is the first of his profession to be interred here."

Many men and women, Freeman declared, will long cherish Dr. Wilmer's memory.

Called "Beloved Physician."

"But in this Cathedral," he added, "there will be retained affectionately by his bishop and colleagues of the Cathedral chapter the memory of his singularly noble, gentle and Christian example. Like Luke of the Gospels, he earned the high distinction of being the 'beloved physician.'"

Breckenridge emphasized Wilmer's contribution to science. He said: "The name of William Holland Wilmer will be remembered by many here and abroad as long as the human eye requires the ministration of the skilled physician."

Senate Quashes Two of Charges In Ritter Case

Defense Elated as Action Removes Star Witness Against Judge.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate yesterday narrowed the impeachment charges against Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of Florida, at the request of the House prosecution—an action that elated defense counsel in preparing for the actual start of the trial Monday.

Attorneys for the 66-year-old jurist said the striking out of two sections of the seventh and last article of impeachment, would eliminate the prosecution's "star witness," Charles A. Russell, and about 30 other witnesses. The defense had sought unsuccessfully to eliminate the entire seventh article.

After disposition of these preliminaries by the Senate, which resolved itself temporarily into a court, Judge Ritter, through his counsel, entered a 12,000-word denial of the House charges. In turn, he denied that he granted excessive receivership fees and personally benefited thereby; that he practiced law after going on the bench and that he evaded taxes on part of his 1929 and 1930 income.

Representative Sumners (Democrat), Texas, chief of the trio of House managers, or prosecutors, moved to strike the two sections of the last article with the explanation they were too involved and would require as long to develop as it would to explain all remaining charges.

Russell, special counsel for the city, had threatened to bring impeachment proceedings against Ritter as a result of the latter's action in granting a preliminary injunction to the power company and in subsequently appointing Hutchinson as special master to try the case.

The other charge eliminated asserted Ritter had "wrongfully and erroneously refused to recognize the right "of the Florida State Banking Department to administer the affairs of the closed Trust Co. of Florida, and had appointed Julian S. Eaton and Clark D. Stearns as receivers.

U. S. Steel Head Opposes Price System Change

Irvin Warns Senate I. C. C. Group Industry Faces 'Untold Damage.'

By the Associated Press.

A warning that abrogation of the price-determination methods now used by the steel industry would cause "untold damage" was served on the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday by William A. Irvin, president of the United States Steel Corporation.

His utterances, made as the committee considered a bill of Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, to eliminate the basing-point pricing system, included a statement that the company is "more than a mere corporation for profit," and a watchful regard for public interest.

"We always think of the public interest and profits, where consistent, at the same time," Irvin, broad-shouldered and red-faced, declared.

"Bunk" vs. Profits Recalled.

This prompted Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, to declare that Walter Gifford, telephone executive, had recently declared publicly that business' assertions of regard for public interest were "bunk" and that profits were the thing.

Irvin was interrogated at length on the ramifications of the giant corporation, apparently fascinating committee members with details of the production and sale of 50,000 different articles ranging from which springs to steel rails.

Wheeler repeatedly sought to get from the steel chief information as to production costs. "I don't want to get in a goldfish bowl unless everyone else is in it," Irwin protested at the request for data he said was secret.

"I don't blame you," said Couzens.

"Neither do I," said Wheeler.

Admits Making Prices.

Irvin did agree, however, that the corporation is more or less the bellwether for the industry when it comes to making prices.

"We generally make the prices," he said, explaining quotations are given to trade publications, and competitors "usually follow" them.

Wheeler's bill would eliminate the system which calls for the addition to the production cost of transportation charges from a given base point in determining the final price.

He added:

"During all of my 41 years of service with the Steel corporation we have sought to serve the public, conform to law, pay the highest going wage in the industry, and finally make profit for the 232,000 owners of our stock. The basing-point practice is not the device of one man or a group of men. Like Topsy, 'It just growed.'"

"The U. S. Steel Corporation is more than a mere corporation for profit. My problem would be much simpler if my responsibility were one of profit only. The present practice of basing-point prices has been challenged. So far we have not found a different selling program that would not damage smaller competitors and consumers who have located their plants under the present method of selling. So far, a different program that may not do untold damage to settled communities of workers and increase costs to consumers has not been found.

"Our minds are open to the suggestions of experts, or statute regulations by Government provided that we have an even break with our competitors and are free to serve the public in peace or war. We seek no special advantage and we are unwilling to grant an advantage to our competitors. The change, as suggested, would be least harmful to us of any in the industry because of our plant locations in various parts of the country and, in my opinion, in the long run it would be a benefit to the Steel corporation which, however, has never sought to profit by the ruin of its competitors."

Green Proposes Single Printing Trades Union

A. F. of L. Head Strikes Back at His Foes in Feud Between Factions

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 3.—Striking at two of his principal opponents in the American Federation of Labor's industrial union feud, William Green tonight proposed a consolidation of the printing trades unions.

Charles P. Howard, president of the Typographical Union, and George L. Berry, president of the Printing Pressmen, have joined John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, in his fight to give each big industry one big union.

After noting that printing office workers once were united but had split into craft organizations, Green said:

"I am confident that if those employed in the printing industry would now agree to unite and create one organization for the printing industry, the American Federation of Labor would respond to such a request and would grant a charter under which all those who are now members of several printing trades unions would be blended into one international printing trade organization.

"But, because the American Federation of Labor holds fast to the principle of voluntarism, it will not force these printing trade organizations to do so."

Green assailed Lewis for claiming that the federation's present policy was keeping thousands of employes in mass production industries out of the organized labor movement.

"If these unorganized workers wish to become organized, and want a different form of organization than they could secure through affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, there is nothing under the sun to stop them from creating such an organization," he said.

"The facts are that these unorganized workers are prevented from becoming organized because of the tremendous opposition and persecution of their employers."

Green said the federation's present policy was sufficiently broad to embrace both craft and industrial unionism. The charter granted to the United Automobile Workers last year covered 98 per cent of the workers in the production end of the industry, he said.

Highly skilled auto workers had been awarded to craft unions, Green maintained, because it was to their best interest to be in separate bargaining units.

"The submersion of their identity would mean the sacrifice of their bargaining power," he said.

Myers Guilty

and again, who was a party to the crime. Myers, he stated emphatically, basing his arguments on the State's evidence testimony of Cleary, lay in the apartment of Albert Sutton at Alban Towers in Washington and plotted to rub out Edward (Mickey) McDonald, the gambler for whom the bullets that felled the route agent for a morning newspaper were originally intended.

"It is necessary" Pugh told the jury, "that we bring a man like Cleary into court to testify. If we had known anyone else, who had no criminal record, do you think we would have done this? We had to bring Cleary here. We want to keep Montgomery County clean and clear of racketeers."

His argument was in rebuttal of the plea offered by Defense Attorney Samuel Levin, of Baltimore.

Levin's delivery electrified even the dozing court baliffs as he discredited Cleary early this afternoon.

It was Cleary, Levin said, pounding the railing with his stubby fist, who wanted to "save his own neck and his own skin."

Then in the manner of Caesar about to cross some legal Rubicon he burst forth with all the invective at his command against Cleary.

Group to Revise Lift Code Named

Task of studying and revising the present elevator code of the District was placed in the hands of a special committee appointed by the District Commissioners on motion of Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, yesterday.

Capt. J. S. Bishop, jr., Assistant Engineer Commissioner, was named chairman, and the other members were named as follows: Col. John W. Oehmann, building inspector; John A. Dickinson, Bureau of Standards, and Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel.

Revision of the code was undertaken as a result of the accident which cost the life of 13-year-old Harvey Crowell in an automatic elevator at 7611 Georgia avenue last month.

Frank Bryam, 71, Dies After Long Illness

A long illness resulted in the death yesterday of Frank Bryam, 71, who retired in 1931 after 40 years as an employe of the City Postoffice.

Born in Washington, he was widely known in music circles due to his membership in the Westminster Presbyterian Church choir. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Carrie V. Law-Bryam, an Eastern High School music teacher.

Defense Argues Against 'Fraud' Charge, Ends Argument Here.

By the Associated Press.

Counsel for the Golden States Advertising Co. pleaded yesterday with Solicitor Karl A. Crowley, of the Postoffice Department, "not to be misled and brand Young Al Smith, Vinc Murphy and all these honest people for fraud."

With this they completed their effort to "show cause" why their "contest" should not be barred from using the mails as a "lottery."

Both Alfred E. Smith jr., vice president and counsel of the company, and Vincent E. Murphy, former New York State comptroller and secretary-treasurer of the Golden Stakes, earlier testified to their business relations which had grown out of a family friendship of 12 years. Smith said he was paid $5,200 a year.

Worked "Conscientiously."

Al jr. told Crowley he had worked "conscientiously" at his job since he joined the company on February 22, visiting the office every day for three or four hours.

"Some days all day," he added.

Murphy testified affably that he "knew the whole Smith family," having become acquainted with them while he was a State Assemblyman in 1922—on the "opposite side of the fence."

Murphy said he suggested the employment of young Smith "to take some of the work off the shoulders" of the company's legal advisers, and added he was "very friendly with this young fellow."

"Convict us as a lottery, if you will," he pleaded, "but don't brand us as a fraud when we've conducted our business as fairly as we could."

Details Concealed, Charge.

C. W. Hassell, summing up the Government's case, declared "fraud is found here in concealment from victims of this scheme of the details thereof when they are asked to part with their money."

"Very few people would go into this scheme if they knew they had to purchase 150 songs, get someone to play them on a piano and study the so-called cartoons as they were litsening to them."

Golden Stakes' witnesses had testified $150,000 in prizes were to be awarded for the best selection of song titles to fit six cartoons—based on the words, the music and the "meaning" of the songs.

"Skill was required in judging," testified Ray Greenleaf, Greenwich Village artist, as answer to a Government contention that the cartoon-naming contest was a game of "lot or chance."

The 'Number' Racket

By Howard F. Wentworth.

A police raiding squad struck again at Washington's thriving "numbers" racket yesterday, arrested two persons and confiscated a large quantity of alleged lottery books, slips and wagered cash.

A man and woman were arrested. They gave names of Roger W. Simkins, 36, and Mary Jones, 36, both Negroes. Charged with operating a lottery, they were released in bonds of $1,500 each. Simkins, police reported, is already under bond on two other gambling counts.

Three additional persons in the establishment when police entered were arrested for questioning, but subsequently released. The raiders seized 50 reputed "numbers" books, 500 slips and nearly $50 in cash, they said.

Because present District laws do not cover by name activities of the ever-growing "numbers" racket, Lieut. Little charges suspects under the lottery law. A case is pending before the Court of Appeals.

If the court rules that the "numbers" game is a lottery, he pointed out, local authorities will have a definite law under which the illicit game can be curbed and operators prosecuted.

As an example of the need for adequate regulations governing city-wide racket activities, Lieut. Little cited an incident yesterday where his men were forced to release four suspects because of insufficient evidence to warrant their arrest.

The four suspects, he said, were seated in an automobile in the 600 block of Twentieth street northwest, openly writing "numbers" bets. Two members of the vice squad surprised them. But when the officers approached the car, the occupants quickly threw their lottery receipts into the street.

"That is the reason I feel that mere possession of 'numbers' slips should be prima facie evidence," said Lieut. Little. "If such a law was enacted, we could 'crack down' on this vicious racket and make the cases hold in court."

Big-time racketeers pay 600 to 1 when a "number" is "hit." During a recent heavyweight prize fight a boxer was knocked out in 1 minute and 59 seconds.

The next day the number 159 was played throughout Washington. A so-called "big-shot" gambler collected $5,000 in bets. Then he began to figure. If the "number" should come out, the pay-off—at 600 to 1—would be $3,000,000.

Knowing he could not possibly pay the winners, this "big-shot" racketeer closed his establishment and disappeared. The "number" didn't "hit"—missing by only one figure.

Announcing
WASHINGTON MOTOR SALES COMPANY
623-25 H Street N.W.
Retail Sales Representative for
HUDSON and TERRAPLANE

A new name is added to the list of Washington business houses. But the men behind the Washington Motor Sales Company are old in experience and long-established in the business and social life of this city.

In announcing our appointment as retail dealers for Hudson and Terraplane, we are offering to Washington motorists what we believe to be one of the most unusual combinations to be found anywhere. Cars of outstanding beauty, quality and value, backed by one of the largest, best equipped, most capable and responsible service organizations in the country.

Service by CALL CARL

This combination is made possible by an arrangement whereby CALL CARL, INC., located just across the street from our showrooms, will take over the entire service responsibility on the cars we sell.

CALL CARL, INC., needs no introduction to car owners in this part of the world. Established here for almost fifty years and specializing in automobile service since 1919, the reputation of this company is literally Nation-wide. They occupy four full floors—over 70,000 square feet—equipped with all the latest special tools and testing equipment. They employ 125 trained mechanics, including experts in every branch of automobile repair and maintenance work. So complete are their facilities that they could easily, if necessary, build an entire car without calling on a single outside source for materials, labor or working equipment. They are open 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

Factory-Trained Experts

To their already strong organization, CALL CARL, INC., have added a group of Hudson factory-trained service experts. The result is to make available to local Hudson and Terraplane owners the strongest possible assurance of lasting motoring pleasure and satisfaction.

Our decision to apply for a Hudson and Terraplane dealership was based on the recommendation of CALL CARL, INC., who told us that their experience in repairing all makes of cars in recent years shows that Hudson and Terraplane owners enjoy greater satisfaction and greater freedom from mechanical trouble than any other group of owners.

Special Opening Display

For our grand opening, we have arranged a special display of new Hudsons and Terraplanes, in striking Spring colors, that will give you a new appreciation of how beautiful an automobile can be. And, beneath this beauty, these cars "pack a wallop"—in record-breaking performance, certified economy and total mileages of 125,000, 150,000, 250,000 miles and more.

Come in and see these great new cars. See "Five Things you Never Saw Before"—five remarkable new features not obtainable on any other automobile, that add greatly to your driving pleasure, comfort and safety. Then let us give you a "Discovery Drive" in a new Hudson or Terraplane. We will be glad to take you—you will be glad you came.

Here's Why We Are Selling Hudsons and Terraplanes

"Hello, is this Call Carl, Inc.?"

"Yes, sir. What can we do for you?"

"This is the Washington Motor Sales Company. We are just getting organized to go into the retail automobile business, and we want some good advice about what car to handle."

"Well, we service them all. If you're interested in selling cars that will stand up and give real service to owners, we can tell you the answer all right."

"That's just exactly what we want to know, because that's the kind of cars we want to sell."

"Then our best advice is to try to get Hudson and Terraplane. They are beautiful cars and they're getting more popular every minute. Besides that, WE FIND THAT HUDSON AND TERRAPLANE OWNERS HAVE LESS MECHANICAL TROUBLE AND ARE BETTER SATISFIED THAN ANY OTHERS. You'll make friends in a hurry with those cars."

"Thanks a lot. That's just what we wanted to know. It's Hudson and Terraplane for us."

Hauptmann Maintains a Stony Silence as He Goes to His Death for Kidnaping

Eyes of the World Are Turned on Trenton as Baby's Killer Forfeits Life After All Last-Minute Attempts to Evade Punishment Fail.

away from the chair and went to the electrical switch box just back of the condemned man.

He began turning a big brass wheel.

As the lethal lightning struck him, Hauptmann gave a convulsive leap. His legs stiffened and his thumb nails bit into the palms of his hands.

Dynamo's Song Only Sound.

There was now a steady whine in the death chamber, the death song of the dynamo. It continued for what seemed an eternity, but which actually was only 2 minutes and 15 seconds.

Smoke began to curl up around Hauptmann's head, and then Elliott knew his job was about done. He began turning the big brass wheel in the other direction.

A pinkish glow had appeared on Hauptmann's forehead by this time and the smoke plume was describing a halo above him.

The condemned man's chest was stretched forward and the ribs were pressing against the white skin, covered with a fuzz of hair.

Elliott nodded to the doctors. One of them stepped forward with a stethoscope, applied this to Hauptmann's chest, and then stepped back, saying nothing. The others did likewise.

It was the sixth, Dr. Weisler, resident physician of the prison, who pronounced Hauptmann dead.

From Elliott's standpoint, it must have been a highly successful job, and for that he must give Hauptmann part of the credit.

The one-time Bronx carpenter, one would have thought, had made up his mind to co-operate with his executioner. When Elliott did not immediately place the electrode on his head, Hauptmann had looked up at him, much in the manner of a man wondering why his barber did not get to work.

Sought to Prevent Burn.

Elliott was determined that Hauptmann's head would not be burned. Therefore he turned the current on very gradually.

Now the guards came forward, yanked Hauptmann's body from the chair and carried it out to a slab in an anteroom.

There the blue coat and khaki pants were removed and the body placed in a $9 suit of clothes.

Col. Kimberling said the body would remain there until Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, the condemned man's widow, calls for it.

The climax in the case came after another day of frenzy, wild rumors and last-minute suspense.

Those of us who had been "invited" to the execution went to the prison at 7:15 p. m. We went there remembering what happened Tuesday night, when the execution was postponed at the request of the Mercer County grand jury, and convinced that we were in for another postponement.

There was good reason to doubt. Gov. Hoffman and Attorney General Wilentz were closeted in the State House and it was being freely predicted that the Governor would grant another 30-day reprieve.

Col. Kimberling earlier in the day had asked Wilentz for "legal advice" on the execution.

Wilentz told him that he should go ahead with it "unless" any one of three things happened.

The only possible happening that was taken seriously was another 30-day reprieve by Gov. Hoffman.

Attorney General Wilentz told Col. Kimberling that he had advised Gov. Hoffman that he did not have authority to grant another reprieve. At the same time, he told the prison warden to hold up the execution if the Governor issued a reprieve.

With Hoffman and Wilentz pondering the case at a late hour, there was good reason to believe that another delay was in prospect.

But Kimberling had instructed the witnesses on Wednesday to be at the prison tonight at 7:15.

A prison guard stopped you, examined your invitation, and then searched you. That was just the beginning of the searching business.

Inside the barred doors, you were taken into an office and searched again, this time more thoroughly.

The guards even examined pencils and pipes. It had been reported that somebody had a camera so small that it could be fitted into a pencil or a pipe.

Your legs were patted, naturally, because it was a photographer, posing as a reporter, who made a picture of Ruth Snyder in the electric chair with a tiny camera strapped to his leg.

Lieut. Robert W. Hicks, former District Highway Department employe, was among the witnesses. He explained again that, as Gov. Hoffman's private criminologist, he was there to make notes on anything that Bruno Houptmann might say.

"To see if it fits into my investigation," he explained.

"Tell them in Washington," he added, "that this is the second electrocution I have witnessed. I saw that fellow—what's his name, the guy that assassinated Mayor Cermak of Chicago—die in the chair in Florida. That is, this will be the second electrocuton if Hauptmann dies."

At ths time—7:25 o'clock—Gov. Hoffman and Attorney General Wilentz still were conferring at the State House.

The reporters and the other witnesses still did not know whether there was going to be an electrocution.

"If they don't burn Hauptmann tonight," said one, "somebody ought to be arrested and charged with violating the constitution. If I remember correctly, there is something in that about 'cruel and inhuman' punishment."

"God, it seems to me Hauptmann has been tortured enough with all these delays."

By this time, we each had been called forward and started on a torturous journey toward the death house.

After passing from Kimberling's office, where we had vowed not to smuggle in cameras, persons or narcotics, we were again searched in the rotunda, or "center" of the prison.

Courtney Riley Cooper, author of crime stories and intimate friend of J. Edgar Hoover, said:

"I am beginning to think that there may be an execution, after all. The palms of my hands are sweating. That's almost an infallible sign."

But there remained Gov. Hoffman and the possibility of another reprieve.

Finally, all doubt was dissipated. Al Hermann, secretary to the Court of Pardons, stated he had been informed Gov. Hoffman had announced there would be no reprieve.

At 3 Minutes to 8 o'clock, the captain of the guard, obviously an army alumnus, ordered the witnesses to line up "in a colmun of two's."

Scenes at Trenton, N. J., Prison as Scheduled Death Hour Neared

Associated Press and Wide World Photos.

This we did.

Somebody said:

"Suppose Hauptmann makes a death-chair confession in German. Does anybody here know German?"

One reporter said he did, but he was to miss the chance of being the evening's hero.

Hauptmann was scheduled to die at 8 p. m.

Kimberling Also Searched.

However, it was 8:14 when Col. Kimberling appeared where the witnesses were gathered. As he came in he, too, was searched—perhaps to set an example.

Col. Kimberling, looking very weary, confronted the newspaper reporters.

"There are a great many rumors," he said, "that somebody is going to try to carry in a camera.

"If we catch anybody trying to do that, we will, of course, throw him out.

"I have been warned that somebody is going to try to put over a fast one. Just what is meant I don't know.

"If Hauptmann says anything, I'll handle it. Just remember that I am the principal keeper of this prison.

"I want everybody to remain seated in the death house. That ought to be to the advantage of all concerned.

"And remember about the photographs."

Now began the actual parade to the death house, the witnesses marching in two's. We went through a mess hall, and then down a subterranean passageway, and finally we were out in the prison yard.

It was cold—such a night perhaps when the "crime of the century" was committed.

Through the prison yard you walked, along the high wall, and finally, after a left turn, you saw the death house.

There was activity in that death house. The lights were on and men were moving about.

An airplane droned overhead and you could see its lights. The thought: How Bruno Hauptmann would like to be in that and flying away to freedom.

You were searched again and presently you were walking into the death house.

It is such a simple little structure for the end of a drama that has aroused the entire world, that has left behind it a trail of political feuds, broken families and suicides.

The death house is just a little red-brick, one-story structure. It looks much like an old-fashioned barber chair, except for the straps attached to it and the electric wire that coils up toward the wall.

Over in one corner of the chair was draped a dirty towel, the purpose of which was not explained.

Warden Takes Precautions.

Col. Kimberling, a kindly man with a family, made one last talk.

"I don't want you gentlemen to think," he said, "that I regard you as crooked. But in view of all the rumors about smuggled cameras I have had to take precautions.

"I would like you to button up your overcoats and I want you to keep your hands out of your pockets until the execution is over."

"Say," said a witness, "that clock's two minutes fast."

Col. Kimberling was quite sure it was correct. A friendly controversy followed.

That was the prologue to the death of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, and controversy probably will be the keynote of the epilogue.

A moment later Hauptmann came into the death chamber, smiled a sickly smile and died.

At 5:08 Attorney General Wilentz, escorted by two policemen, appeared at Gov. Hoffman's office in the State House.

"Will you tell the Governor that the Attorney General is here," he said to an attendant.

He would make no statement except to say that Gov. Hoffman had sent for him.

C. Lloyd Fisher, attorney for Hauptmann, earlier had made an unsuccessful attempt to delay the execution.

He asked Anthony M. Hauck, jr., prosecutor of Hunterdon County, to call the grand jury of that county into session to consider the repudiated confession of Paul H. Wendel, disbarred Trenton attorney.

Col. Kimberling was in a quandary this morning about carrying through the execution and called upon Attorney General Wilentz for advice.

Wilentz told Col. Kimberling in a letter:

"The execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann must be carried out in accordance with the warrant now in your possession, issued to you by the presiding judge of the Oyer and Terminer of the County of Hunterdon, and within the time set forth in said warrant, unless:

"(A) There is a reprieve by the Governor. I have heretofore advised the Governor at his request that he was without authority at that time to grant a reprieve. However, if an order of reprieve is served upon you by the Chief Executive it is not your duty to question its validity, but to obey it.

"(B) A stay of execution by the Court of Oyer and Terminer of the County of Hunterdon, or some other court of competent jurisdiction.

"(C) Commutation of sentence by the Board of Pardons.

"I can readily understand the reason for your confusion. Since the early part of December, 1935, through daily statements to the press, all from important sources, reflections have been cast upon not only the validity of the conviction but upon the officials who only because of their sworn duty participated in the prosecution.

"The seeds of distrust and the germs of suspicion have been planted until the entire Nation has been thrown into unjustified confusion."

The State House was thrown into an uproar a few minutes before Hauptmann was to be electrocuted when a girl previously not mentioned in the case entered Gov. Hoffman's office and said she had knowledge of the Lindbergh baby kidnaping and that she was certain "that Hauptmann is not guilty."

She was accompanied by two officers who promptly rushed her into a private office where she was questioned.

Whatever she said apparently was not enough to convince the Governor.

The setting at the prison this morning was the same as that on Hauptmann's last "last day"—Tuesday. The streets around the big institution were roped off and a heavy detail of police were there to handle the crowds.

But, strangely, there were no crowds in the afternoon. It may have been the bitter wind that swept through Trenton, or it may have been that the erstwhile curious, having been fooled Tuesday, wouldn't believe that Hauptmann was really going to die.

Neither, apparently, would Hauptmann believe it.

Col. Kimberling, after a visit to the death house, said that the German had eaten what was for him a big breakfast and had ordered a large dinner.

Corn flakes and milk, fried eggs, bread and butter and coffee.

The dinner:

Celery and olives, salmon salad, corn fritters, sliced cheese, fruit salad and cake, and coffee and milk.

Col. Kimberling said that Hauptmann told the prison guards that he was "confident—not worried." However, they thought he seemed nervous and upset.

"The guards told me," Col. Kimberling said, "that Hauptmann said the events of last Tuesday would remain in his memory a long time."

"Long time," shouted somebody. "He hopes it will be a long time."

Kidnaper-Murderer Twice Defeated Death in N. J. Chair

German Carpenter, an Illegal Resident, Coldly Maintained Throughout That He Was Innocent of the 'Crime of the Century.'

The record of the Hauptmann case—for months before his death it had lost significance as the Lindbergh case—is so confused that even now it is almost impossible to chart its progress.

The cloud of uncertainty that hung over the illegally entered shaven-pated German alien in the death house in the New Jersey State Prison at Trenton, made most people add "maybe" after knowing his death date finally had been set for last night.

Growing out of a legal battle unprecedented in the history of jurisprudence, the up-to-the-last-minute possibilities were so fantastic that even Col. Mark O. Kimberling chief keeper of the prison, frankly said, "I will cross bridges when I come to them."

Interspersed through the fabric of the case were evidences of the world-wide interest in solving the "Crime of the Century." Fantastic figures flitted across the canvas. When Hoffman reprieved the criminal in January, a newspaper covering the area around the Sahara Desert in French Africa carried a five-column picture of the smiling German carpenter on the front page.

In Washington Mrs. Edward B. McLean was swindled of more than $100,000 by Gaston B. Means, now in jail for the crime, who promised to find the Lindbergh baby. Shortly before the execution she brought Lieut. Robert W. Hicks, erstwhile employe in the District Highway Department, into the case as Hoffman's private criminologist. Hicks also went to Cuba at the Governor's behest to investigate an angle there.

The Governor is credited with having been Hauptmann's strongest advocate and the majority of the moves to save his life were initiated by the Republican chief in the face of Democratic opposition.

Paul Wendel, the last confusing element, entered the case like a bombshell. In spite of rumors that Gov. Hoffman "had something in the line of new evidence," when reports of his "confession" became known, the principals of the case scurried around, each trying to bend the new development to his side. Gov. Hoffman called the pardon board to a special meeting it is still stated, to consider a new trial in view of the Wendel evidence.

Wendel was once under observation in a mental institution and served a term for perjury.

A few days earlier, in a crisply worded decision, the board of pardons refused clemency on the Wendel evidence, although the Governor had virtually pleaded for his life before the board. Immediately after the board's decision, Hoffman announced he would grant no further reprieve to the condemned man.

A later appeal by C. Lloyd Fisher, Hauptmann's attorney, to Justice Trenchard was of no avail.

"Rail 16," perhaps the most famous bit of evidence in the trial, came in for another investigation. Hoffman engaged Arch W. Loney, Federal wood expert, to study the Lindbergh kidnap ladder. With the Governor, he inspected the attic of the Hauptmann home in the Bronx, from which the State contended a board was taken for the construction of the ladder.

Loney told the Governor he did not believe the rail came from the attic; and on that another report, emanating from an authoritative source, was current that Loney had asked Attorney General David T. Wilentz, who prosecuted Hauptmann, to agree to another reprieve. During the Flemington trial last year, Loney, then a WPA wood expert, telegraphed Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel, he was willing to testify if he had more time to study the laddar. He said he did not believe Hauptmann made it.

Bitter words flew back and forth over the situation. Names were called but the night of March 31 approached without a seeming possibility of stay.

Then the Grand Jury of Mercer County took up the Wendel angle. After a frantic day Allyne Freeman, the foreman, friend of Gov Hoffman and a candidate for the Legislature at the next election on the Republican ticket, called Kimberling and asked a stay of execution. The request came after Hauptmann's head was shaved and he was ready to walk the few steps from his cell to the electric chair.

Wendel asked to be heard by the jury and sent word that "the reputed confession was made up out of the whole cloth and I can prove it if given a chance."

When the news of the stay reached the crowds of hundreds of men and women standing in the white glare of searchlights outside the prison walls, there was a roar of cheers intermingled with boos. Inside, by the incalcuable grapevine within prison walls, the prisoners cheered too that the chair had been cheated, though temporarily.

Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, the prisoner's blonde wife, who has steadfastly maintained his innocence, made what she thought was her last visit to him, and his mother in Kamenz, Germany, cabled her faith.

Hauptmann spent the day scheduled for his death crying nervously, and loudly calling that he had no part in the crime. He wrote a letter to Gov. Hoffman which the Governor had run off in his office mimeographing machine for the press in which Hauptmann said he was paying the penalty for a crime he did not commit. He mentioned Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, one of the chief witnesses against him—the "Jafsie" who identified Hauptmann as the man to whom he had paid the $50,000 ransom money, part of which was found in Hauptmann's possession at the time of his arrest.

Through all the desperate fight for his life, the central figure broke only towards the end. On the day set for his execution Hauptmann willed his last meal to Dr. Condon and he alternated between loudly spoken promises "to die like a man" and nervous sobs. When told he had at least 48 more hours to live, he said "I am happy" and went to sleep after having paced his cell for the 24 previous hours.

At 11:43 on th night before the scheduled execution, the Mercer County grand jury filed from its room on the third floor of the Trenton courthouse weary and noncommittal. The jury had been adjourned until Tuesday, four days after the time set for the death of the convicted kidnapper.

Since nine o'clock that morning, the jury had been considering the Wendel "confession" and its import and reviewing the entire Lindbergh crime—a body unable to act directly on that case in any event.

County Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall cleared the fog slightly by making an announcement at 12:10 a. m. that the jury had discontinued its Hauptmann investigation and consideration of Wendel. All witnesses who had not been heard were understood to have been dismissed permanently.

But in spite of everything the murder charge still stands against Wendel and Marshall will have to move for its dismissal before it can be wiped from the books of the State.

The man struck was reported to have been a State employe, who sought to walk at his side. His identity was not learned. He was talking rapidly to the Governor when he was struck.

The procession continued along State street to the Governor's hotel. The Governor was flanked as he walked by his secretary, William La Gay, and several Statehouse police officers.

To questions from newspapermen about the Hauptmann case, the Governor said repeatedly, "no statement."

From sources close to the executive it was learned that the attorney general refrained from advising him upon the legality of a reprieve at their conference today. Wilentz pointed out he had already given an opinion that the Governor's reprieve powers expired 90 days after Hauptmann's conviction and sentence at Flemington in February, 1935.

The Governor, his statement to the press said, believed his reprieve powers continued until mid-March, this year, 90 days after the United States Supreme Court declined to review Hauptmann's conviction.

In their conference, it was learned, the Governor reviewed his belief that there was evidence of accomplices in the crime, said further investigation was warranted and cited the parts of the State's case against Hauptmann, including the identification witnesses, which he considered questionable.

The Governor proposed to make an extended statement upon his attitude, it was learned, but finally accepted Wilentz's suggestion that he limit it to the brief expression of belief he lacked further reprieve power, which was released.

BLOOD MONEY.—New York police, demolishing Hauptmann's garage, found $840 more of the ransom money and a gun, cannily cached in board. The main part of the marked ransom money was found in an old shoe box in the broom closet of Hauptmann's home. Mrs. Hauptmann, a meticulous housefrau, said she never had seen the box. Written on a board in another dark closet was "Jafsie's" phone number and the serial number of some of the ransom bills. Hauptmann never was able to account for the money, except for his story concerning his dead pal, Fisch.

Case has since died.

Titan's Inadvertency.

Those thousands of tourists who return every summer with streamers proclaiming that "This Car Climbed Mount Washington," as well as that legion of youngsters whose camp councilors annually convoy them in sneakered safaris to the Lake of the Clouds, may wonder at the news that the mountain took the life of a young and expert skier this week. First hurling him from a cliff, it finished the deed with cold and wind. Can this be the genial Mount Washington of the picture postcards, the burnt-leather souvenirs, the old Dutchman of a chuffing cog railway?

It is the same. For, though Westerners may scoff at the mere 6,300-foot elevation of the eroded old lump of granite, the fact is that this New Hampshire summit has business with which man may not lightly interfere. In summer the old landmark presents a benign enough disposition. But in winter it is a different story. As arbiter of weather along the Northeastern seaboard (meteorologists now spend winters on its heights) it undertakes to mix the chills from the Labrador Current with the warmer inland airs—a thunderous labor.

To do it well, the mountain strips for action in early autumn. All roads and paths up its slopes are first blocked off with snow. The tributaries of the Wild Amanoosuc are frozen tight. Ravines and ledges are smoothed over for better efficiency and the furze above tree-line is completely flattened. Man's buildings on the top would be done away with, too, were it not for the cables with which they are lashed down. Even at that they are as good as gone when the sweat of the mountain's strivings freezes, to cover them with blankets of frost feathers.

It was under such conditions that an overdaring lad from Princeton ventured down the sharp headwall of Tuckerman's. And he died, as have two or three each year before him, caught up inadvertently in the tumult of a Titan's winter labor, which carries on long after spring has camped herself upon the southern Blue Ridge.

Epilogue To A Biography.

About this time last year a book about the upper Niobrara country in western Nebraska was awarded the Atlantic Nonfiction Contest prize. It was a girl's biography of her father—a rowdy, courageous, old bully named Jules Sandoz, who only stopped marrying "anything that got off the train" because his fourth wife was of as enduring stock as himself.

She had, so her daughter wrote, "the fair skin of the German Swiss, with blue eyes and soft, curly brown hair under her brown rosetted hat." Later her children were to see that skin furrowed in despair, "blood dripping from her face and her hand where she had been struck with the wire whip . . . " wielded by her husband. And that, whether it makes pretty reading or not, is the sort of unsparing treatment which raised Mari Sandoz high in the ranks of biographers.

Last week an epilogue was added to this best-seller which is like spying on the actors after the curtain has been rung down. It is, as are most epilogues, anticlimactic. Yet in eight simple words, Mrs. Sandoz has given as keen an insight into her own character as her daughter managed to do of Mr. Sandoz in 424 pages. Of her life with the brutal Jules against a cruel setting of droughts, storms, wind and isolation, she says quite simply: "We had a lots of ups and downs." There, indeed, is the stoicism of the German Swiss, the bravery of the plainswoman, the philosophy of a wife who realized that her place was in the background, not only during her husband's lifetime but also in her husband's biography.

It is not often that the world is treated to such a dramatic picture of self-deflation. Characters in books do not customarily make an appearance after the last chapter to state that reports of their life have been "greatly exaggerated." Lawrence of Arabia did it in a frank, posthumous epitaph of himself, but then he was always disposed to inexplicable actions. Perhaps there is more real heroism in this post-biographical statement from a retiring Nebraska farm woman.

The Sense Of Proportion.

Man's greatest difficulty, in the unending struggle to achieve a better civilization, is his distorted sense of proportion. That which affects our individual interests, or otherwise appeals to our emotions, is always likely to obscure our limited vision. Few of us have the detachment, the knowledge and the ability necessary to achieve a balanced viewpoint on any of the myriad tangled problems which our societies are constantly called upon to solve. Yet, after each failure, we go on trying. There is no other alternative.

Both the absence of this sense of proportion, and the conscientious effort to attain it, have been particularly pronounced throughout the appalling story of the Lindbergh kidnaping. Over four years elapsed between the night when the sleeping child was stolen from his crib and last night, when the man convicted of the crime finally went to the electric chair. In that protracted interval every angle of this ghastly case has been carefully scrutinized, while every one of its many emotional aspects has been as sedulously exploited. At either end of the chain lies an unnecessary death—that of an innocent child and that of a man held to be the murderer. The Mosaic law is satisfied; not so the public conscience.

Every day innocent children die from avertible causes, and every day men who have higher capacities for good citizenship than Bruno Richard Hauptmann are struck down in the prime of life, leaving behind them aged mothers, bereaved wives and fatherless children. Had Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., died of illness, had Bruno Hauptmann fallen on the battlefield, the actual loss would have been the same, and today there would have been none of the present feeling of tragic bewilderment. Obviously much more than these two lives has been at stake throughout.

And it does not take intensive thought to realize why the headlines have screamed and people have argued and crowds have gathered during the recurrent dramatic periods of this cause celebre. From the night when the helpless baby was stolen from seemingly perfect security to the night when life was blasted from the equally helpless convict, there has been a deep, if somewhat confused, belief that the handling of this case was singularly important for our civilization. This conviction helps to explain the harassing uncertainties of the last three days. There was no savagery behind these cat-and-mouse tactics; only an effort to achieve that certainty so seldom accorded to humanity.

What first stood out was the weakness of a society unable to guarantee minimum protection to the family of a most honorable and distinguished citizen. Next came the disturbing implications of a trial in which restraint and dignity were shockingly absent. Finally there has been the grim horror of the protracted torture exacted from a man who to the end asserted his complete innocence. To preserve the sense of proportion through all this has been for many an impossible task.

The baby was murdered. Hauptmann was seriously implicated in this abominable crime. The trial was fair, in spite of its grave transgressions of judicial decorum. The most painstaking review of evidence and further inquiry failed utterly to clear the convicted man. These are the incontrovertible facts with which those who would call this a miscarriage of justice have to reckon.

But between the inability of many to be wholly convinced of Hauptmann's guilt, and the satisfaction of others that a ghastly crime has now been appropriately punished, there is a curious bond of union. By their very interest both groups show that they have striven to get this tragedy in perspective. And both schools of opinion reach the conclusion that crime and punishment should be linked exactly and inexorably; that in respect for law, and in law which proves itself worthy of respect, lies the only pathway of social progress. So it is primarily the clash between the certainty of procedure and the uncertainty of knowledge which has raised the tragic dilemmas of this case.

Some day the complete connection between the murdered baby and the executed criminal may be revealed. In the interest of justice, which must always stand above the breath of criticism, that is vital. But nothing is ever likely to come out which will affect the essential lesson of the Lindbergh case: that however human emotions may be harrowed, and whatever the sadistic instincts of mankind, a scrupulous respect for the cool procedure of the law will alone permit the exercise of that sense of proportion without which civilization is impossible.

Glittering Generalities.

Plans for the elimination of financiers, as a controlling influence in the conduct of human affairs, no longer constitute news. But it gets into type when Henry Ford, who has no inconsiderable interest in property, predicts that engineers and scientists, by developing a new machine age, will oust financiers completely from positions of control.

Mr. Ford has one noteworthy advantage over his more spectacular competitors in the field of social prophecy. That is our national fondness for scientific fantasy, which surpasses even a congenital weakness for political ballyhoo. We read the early tales of H. G. Wells more than the British, and Jules Verne more than the French. Technocracy is just around the corner behind us, and a World's Fair exhibit of science attracts as much interest as its fan dance. So Mr. Ford's moment of vision is obviously in the right spirit to absorb the average man's interest during the interval between his breakfast coffee and the office.

To make the world safe under technicians, it only remains for Mr. Ford to find scientists and engineers who, like the Philosopher King, combine delight in acquiring knowledge with the ability to use it wisely. It may be protested that history does not record many such. But in addition to generalities for the future Mr. Ford has indulged in generalities regarding the past. To him is attributed the axiom that "history is bunk."

The Sugar Institute Decision.

Interest in the Supreme Court decision handed down this week in the Sugar Institute case centered in the fate of the open-price agreement, under which members pledged themselves to adhere to terms and prices announced in advance of sales.

The Supreme Court in general concurred in the opinion that the sugar refiners were operating in illegal restraint of trade, under the terms of the antitrust law. But the court emphasized that the "vice" in the institute's basic agreement was not in "the mere open announcement of prices and terms in accordance with the custom of the trade . . . The unreasonable restraints which defendants imposed lay not in advance announcements but in the steps taken to secure adherence, without deviation, to prices and terms thus announced."

Far from condemning open price-filing, the decision emphasizes the benefits of "acquisition of wider and more scientific knowledge of business conditions in the minds of those engaged in commerce, and the consequent stabilization of production and prices." The court had in previous cases upheld the right of trade associations to publish prices and terms of sale in past transactions. But its attitude toward advance publication of such information has been in doubt. Now it has definitely ruled that the Sugar Institute may collect and publish information as to current and future prices, thereby removing limitations imposed by the lower court.

Various trade associations have operated successfully under open-price agreements, leaving their members free to change prices and terms of sale at will, subject only to the requirement of publicity. To them the Sugar Institute case is encouraging. They believe it will make possible an effective form of self-regulation in trade practices, eliminating the evils of destructive price-cutting and unfair discrimination. At least, the decision has clarified certain obscurities in interpretation of the antitrust laws, thereby offering much-needed guidance in an uncertain terrain.

Industries unable to rely upon voluntary agreements, to give effect to policies regulating prices and terms of sale, receive little encouragement from the Sugar Institute decision. It has served notice that open price-filing agreements may not be used as a cloak for price-fixing, or for any other kind of restraint upon fair competition. The court states unequivocally that the end sought, however laudable, does not justify illegal means. Desirable though it may be to impose restrictions upon price-cutting, sales below cost, or other destructive competitive practices, industries may not seek protection by ignoring antitrust prohibitions. The bearing of this decision on the pending chain-store bill should not be overlooked in Congress.

The "beneficial and curative" effects of publicity are, in short, of limited efficacy, in view of the restrictive provisions of the antitrust laws, restored to full force with the passing of the NRA. A careful liberalization of those laws seems essential if the benefits of industrial self-regulation are to be enjoyed by industries that find a purely voluntary exchange of information an ineffective device for controlling unfair competitive practices.

A Columbia University scientist has had a cold germ in a test tube for nearly two years. Whether he's trying to tame it, or starve it to death, he hasn't said.

Stakhanovism.

From the Brooklyn Daily Eagle

Recognition of the fact that the Stakhanov movement represents one of the most sensational departures from the fundamental theories of the Bolshevik regime in Russia has centered world-wide interest on this phenomenon. Dispatches from Moscow make it clear that many difficulties are being encountered. Stakhanovites, the name given workers who have been decorated for setting new records in industrial production—in honor of Alexei Stakhanov, who originated the movement—have apparently been subjected to such fulsome flattery that many have suffered swelled heads, with consequent adverse effect on their work.

Furthermore, there seems to continue a widespread feeling that the whole idea of the speed-up represents an aping of so-called bourgeois methods. It is scarcely surprising that a great deal of sullen and passive resistance has been developing to the scheme. Joseph Stalin, who is reputed to have foreseen such a reaction, has been using strong measures against flagrant resisters.

If the idea of the speed-up, with its special rewards for the most efficient workers, is finally accepted it will be a long step in the direction of methods followed in capitalistic states.

Desecration Of The Squares.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is there no way to restrain the mad vandals that are now engaged in making war upon every beauty stop in Washington? They have wrecked and devastated Lafayette and Sherman squares and are now bringing destruction upon the small triangles at street intersections that were formerly such welcome interludes of green in the city's rigid streets. The havoc they have wrought in the West End Pennsylvania avenue triangles is intolerable to any soul that has even a rudimentary sense of beauty. Here, as in other places, they have deliberately rooted up every living thing except a few surviving trees to allow the transforming of the space into squalid lumps of dreary concrete and cement.

What is the Fine Arts Commission doing that it allows this ruthless and savage destruction of all of our downtown park areas? In one place there had grown and thriven a large clump of flowering lilacs. These the vandals tore up by the roots. Another small triangle was plowed up four times, then cemented over solidly, then had bricks put over the cement, then this priceless final result was protected with an iron fence. But the lilacs and shrubbery were not protected.

What is behind all this raiding and ruining? If contractors and corporations influential in politics have received fat contracts and are making profits from the spread of the hideous ruin, let us know the facts and the names of the companies.

If it is only the fruitage of Washington's grotesque and preposterous system of government by which the people have nothing to say about their own city and its affairs, let us know that. And in any event, let us know who are the head vandals that are directing this incalculable injury to the aesthetic and property values of Washington.

CHARLES E. RUSSELL.
Washington, March 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washingtonians, who revere the old-fashioned squares as originally planned by the founders of this city, who had some idea for beauty, would like to inquire of the PWA just why the picturesque paths through Lafayette Square are being supplanted by broad, unsightly, asphalt avenues?

Has this particular alphabetical project decided to create parking space in this historic square? Or, perhaps, it will be used for an eight-day bicycle race or even a dance marathon. These unsightly macadamized thoroughfares can easily accommodate several hundred couple.

But those of us that have enjoyed sitting under the trees in the summer season will hardly relish having our feet encased in sizzling concrete whereas formerly they rested in turf or pebbled walks.

At the rate the commercial juggernaut is proceeding in destroying park, trees and ancient landmarks, the beauties of old-fashioned Washington will soon be a thing of the past.

A Chicagoan's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will you permit a Chicagoan, on the basis of residence here in Washington before you developed a traffic problem, to offer a few suggestions gathered from three weeks of extensive use of taxicabs?

Is there any reason why your streets should be free public garages, both by day and by night? Every street in Washington would automatically be widened by two traffic lanes if the miles of parked cars were immediately removed. The "Washington Plan" alone had a vision of the future and was laid out for wide streets, which parked cars are narrowing down to mere alleys. Try banishing them from the business zone for a month and watch (a) business for the merchants improve, and (b) traffic speed up.

The traffic signals are impossible. They should be timed for a speed of at least 5 to 7 miles an hour faster, and they should be synchronized to permit flow of traffic for at least three-quarters of a mile before a halt, except in the most congested areas, and in the latter for at least four to five squares.

In "rush" hours, rule should be one way only in direction of heaviest flow.

As a final suggestion, why not map out, and establish, "pass around" routes for traffic the need not go through congested areas to reach its destination? There are, it seems to me, some unused "short cuts" the public could be educated to use.

Equitable and even-handed enforcement of such traffic laws as exist would help likewise. A "cafeteria" traffic court for minor violations might be serviceable—it is in other cities. And either disband the "I Gotta Drag" Club immediately, or arouse it to a sense of the social obligation and higher responsibility that are implied in the use of special license plates.

The Way To Disarm.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Suppose citizen Smith should leave his home on Main street with a revolver in his belt on a little hunt for rabbits. And citizen Jones, living across the street, seeing this should deem it necessary to protect himself with two revolvers. And Smith should then conclude that he must be properly protected with three and the other should then supply himself with four and so on until both were weighted down with revolvers supplemented by machine guns but always adding more in order to have the advantage of the neighbor. Both men would be deemed crazy.

Yet this is exactly what is being done by the so-called civilized nations of the earth in response to the insistent demands of munition makers, law makers very few of whom ever had the responsibility of taking care of weekly pay roll, and most powerful of all our militant patriotic societies. And the result is a steadily increasing burden upon the taxpayers, their children and their grandchildren. Our standing Army which a few years ago consisted of 25,000 men must soon be increased to 2,500,000 men so as to be able to lick the other fellow. And when they reached that limit we shall again have to increase the number to 10,000,000 men so as to retain the advantage.

Whom the guards would destroy they first make mad, and now the guards should be satisfied with the evidence of madness at Washington. Meanwhile, Holland, Sweden and Denmark have concluded that the way to disarm is to disarm by reducing their military and naval forces to a police basis and strange as it may seem to our patriots these nations are able to sleep quite as soundly at night as they did before disarming. They have simply adopted the Christian principle of non-resistance, better stated as non-aggression.

Envy And Section 213.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been said, and truly, I believe, that emotions cannot be quieted by arguments. It is my opinion that Section 213 on the statute books is the result of an emotion—envy. If that is so, no facts or figures which prove this law works injustice will be regarded by its proponents.

One point should be discussed for the benefit of those who are subject to Section 213, but who wish to have it apply only to those in the so-called higher brackets. Would it be fairer to have this law inoperative while the employe's salary is in the lower brackets, and then have it begin to operate after the employe has achieved some measure of success?

Of course, this might be considered by some to be an advantage in that it would put the matter largely up to the employe himself. He could see to it that his efficiency never became such that he would be advanced to a position where he would be subject to Section 213. Then we would really begin to have the kind of efficiency in the civil service which some of your correspondents charge we already have. The fact that some of the opponents of this law are willing to have it apply only to the higher-salaried couples, makes it manifest that they are not against it in principle, but only to the extent that it affects themselves.

The Juvenile Court Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We beg to advise that we have read the draft of the Juvenile Court bill, which is before the Seventy-fourth Congress, and we heartily indorse the same; the reasons therefor are so many and pertinent that it would be difficult in a short statement to analyze and go over them.

It may be said, however, that one of the many commendable features in the bill is that it changes the Juvenile Court from a criminal child's police court to that of an equity court; and too, the child is no longer looked upon by the Government and the community as a criminal, but as one who has erred and is to be set aright by the Government in a sort of parental capacity. To our mind also, a most beneficial and valuable feature is that a child is no longer to be treated as a criminal and no record is to be made against him in that regard.

As is very often true in any type of remedial legislation, there may be features upon which improvements may be had, and no doubt appropriate changes will be made by the committee; but, on the whole, it is so great an improvement on the court as it is now constituted that we believe, after a careful perusal and study of the bill, a large majority of the citizenry will unhesitatingly approve the same.

JAMES A. COBB,
GEORGE E. G. HAYES.
Washington, April 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The National Women's Trade Union League, representing the interests of working women, wishes to register with you their approval of the draft of the Juvenile Court bill for the District of Columbia.

We believe that in the years since the passage of the District Juvenile Court law of 1906, study and experience have made changes in our social philosophy. Social responsibility begins before crimes are committed. The juvenile delinquent is entitled to all the help that society can give him, so that he may be diverted from a criminal career.

Working women often find it difficult to fulfill adequately their duties to their families because of the physical and mental drain of job-holding. No woman wants her child to be a criminal. We believe that a court, organized on the plan of the proposed Juvenile Court bill, will help these women raise families of good and honest citizens.

We are particularly emphatic in our approval of the sections in the proposed bill providing separate treatment for the juvenile delinquent from the hardened criminal. A child, tried in a criminal court by criminal procedure, even though he be acquitted, has acquired the pattern for regarding himself as a potential criminal.

Further, we approve the jurisdiction given the court over contributory negligence. Because a child's environment has great effect upon his behavior it seems only logical that the courts should have the power to improve this environment as much as possible.

They (Almost) Never Lie.

Post Office, Saturday.

THREE standard authorities are wrong—so far as the University of Michigan is concerned—in their three separate surveys of the line of demarcation between arithmetic and algebra.

* * *

When we touched upon this vexed question a few days ago, we quoted each member of the triumvirate. We admit to wondering why their findings were, in essence, mutually antagonistic; but—in our native trustfulness concerning a science of which we maintain a resolutely cheerful ignorance—we remained serenely sure that one or other of such experts must be correct. We merely suggested that the Council of the League of Nations be petitioned to decide which of the three this was—and thus to delimit the disputed frontier.

Well, it appears that Prof. Edward Olney fixed this border-line long ago—at least to his satisfaction and his pupils'—and that his fixation was something else again.

* * *

Our authorities were Noah Webster, of the Dictionary; Dr. G. A. Miller, of the Department of Mathematics in the University of Illinois, and Richard Jarvis, of our own intimate circle of Column-readers.

* * *

Webster told us:

"The essential difference between arithmetic and algebra is that the former deals with concrete quantities, while the latter deals with symbols whose (sic) values may be any out of a given number field."

* * *

Miller assured us:

"It is impossible to prove that arithmetic now deals relatively more with concrete quantities than algebra."

* * *

And Jarvis said:

"Pigwash!" He applied that term to both his rivals' contentions, but especially to Webster's. As for Miller's subtle defense of arithmetic against the charge of aggression, Jarvis argued that, however much algebra deals with concrete numbers, arithmetic deals just as much with abstractions:

"What," he demanded, over the cigar which we gave him to open his lips—"what does the ordinary multiplication table deal with, if not abstractions?"

* * *

So now enter that admirer of the Column who too infrequently writes us from Ballston, Va., and who too modestly signs himself "Just 1-125,000,000th." He declaims:

"Before you waste any more cigars on Dick Jarvis, let me tell you that, in my opinion, Prof. Edward Olney, an early professor of mathematics in the University of Michigan and author of a long line of text books on that subject, defined so clear a 'line of demarcation' between arithmetic and algebra that the League of Nations need not be bothered with its delimitation. Leave to the League such minor chores as settling the Italo-Ethiopian war and the sovereignty of Outer Mongolia.

"Prof. Olney, according to my recollection, said, as accurately as briefly:

"'Algebra is the science of the Equation.'

* * *

"In his Science of Arithmetic, Prof. Olney included—as what he termed 'Literal Arithmetic'—the addition, subtraction, multiplication and division of literal quantities (that is, indeterminate quantities expressed by letters), both monominal and multinomial; the use of positive and negative signs; the development of the Binomial Theorem; evolution (roots to the n-th); and generalization by the use of literal quantities of many other purely arithmetical rules. And what a light these generalizations shed upon hitebound 'numeries!' arithmetic!

* * *

"But Olney's Algebra, proper, began with the use and transformations of the equation. . .

* * *

"Surely, his work must be common knowledge among many who were high school kids in the eighties and nineties. Surely, too, they will join with me in the contention that there is a definite line between arithmetic and algebra, and that Prof. Olney, 'the plaw-boy-mathematician,' drew it clearly—more than half a century ago!

* * *

"However," concludes our Ballston correspondent, "I suppose that now some Egyptologist will get under the Rhind of the Mathematical Impyrus and tell us that the line was ancient in the days of the Pharaohs: that, like Dodd in the kindergarten, we've 'knowed the always.'"

* * *

Perhaps. But a correspondent from the National Press Club over the signature of "Cal Culus" reveals to us the fact that we are no Einstein, and says that, if we really wanted to get the low-down on the old superstition about the inability of figures to prevaricate, we should consult, not any Egyptian, but some such Greek as Homer or Strick Gillian, who remarked:

I followed her three blocks or more
With ever quickening pace;
And then she stepped and turned around—
And, oh, I saw her face!
So now I'm searching everywhere
With blood in either eye:
I want to find the man who said
That figures do not lie."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

British Journalism.

London, April 3.

EVER since the Lindberghs left the United States to seek privacy in England, where they ran into a blockade of reporters and photographers by land, sea and air, I have been studying the style, method and content of the English newspapers. The result is a comfort, because their best journalism, though excellent, is no better than our best and their worst worse than our own.

Careless and incomplete reporting and sticky writing are the most flaring characteristics of the popular press. It is common practice to print news items in which the names of the persons concerned are omitted, and often when a name is given the first name is overlooked or the man is identified with only one initial, as P. Smith or J. Jones.

English reporters constantly ignore the rule of who, what, when and where. Their feature men have a bad habit of slopping over or squeezing the old sponge, and they are a great success for primitive tricks of publicity.

• • • •

A FEW weeks ago, for example, Miss Merle Oberon, a moving picture actress, broke into print with the news that her lips had been insured for $100,000, a gag which no self-respecting press agent would have the effrontery to offer the most gullible American news desks at this late date, and again today one of the great popular London newspapers carried on with a variation of the same ancient theme. This time it is Miss Trudi Schoop, a Swiss dancer, who is insured, and for originality it is her hands, not her legs, which figure in the policy. The amount is $300,000 in this case.

They also fall eagerly for their very childish moving picture publicity, but this may be due to the fact that they have in mind the revenue from movie advertising, which was naturally suggested a few days ago when a feature writer smeared half a page with writing of the kind which we call a dog story growling about the glamorous Dietrich, bang-up against a big display advertisement of a Marlene Dietrich picture.

I noticed also that one of the popular Sunday papers, which carries a great lineage in advertisements from the promoters of football pools, printed a resounding editorial denouncing attempts to abolish or regulate the pools, which are notoriously crooked.

AT home we have the equivalent of the British football pool in the baseball pool and the number racket, but not even our worst newspapers accept advertisement to promote the frauds, although some go so far as to emphasize the clearing-house figures as a basis for the number rackets.

The English popular press seems to have absolutely no ethics or conscience in regard to advertisements for fake cures for cancer, rheumatism, diabetes and other scourges. This sort of advertising copy gets an enormous display and presumably yields enormous revenue to the publisher, and it is an unhappy commentary on the average intelligence of the English community in that such dangerous nonsense obviously results in sales sufficient to pay for the advertisements and yield a profit.

It has been 25 years at least since the patent medicine faker was kicked out of the majority of the American papers or compelled to honey up his copy with a pseudo-scientific pretext.

Such phrases as "amazing discovery" and "astonishing cure" are common in the English patent medicine ads, and no doubt hundreds of thousands of poor devils are swindled and victimized with false hopes and tragic disappointment through the connivance of the publishers, who have had the gall to accuse our papers of driving Lindbergh out of the country.

• • • •

IN this connection not only did they waylay Lindbergh much more diligently than our papers did, sniping his picture and peering into his tray at the Adelphi Hotel in Liverpool to see what he had for dinner, but they also sniped a picture of Barbara Hutton's baby and published it soon after the 5-and-10 princess and countess received a ransom note.

They cannot be blamed for hopping to the Lindbergh job, because Lindbergh makes international news and then tries to resist the forces of human nature, and neither can they be criticized for sniping Barbara's baby, because she has made herself spectacular for years. But they were in no position to pull snoots at our press for doing the same thing and doing it with more skill—what's more.

There was an amusing little jam in the Adelphi in Liverpool when Lindbergh was holed up there waiting for the English journalists to go away. The papers discovered that Lindbergh had eaten herring for dinner, and he accused the waiter of revealing this vital information. That made the waiter sore, and he explained that a reporter had observed the skeleton on the plate as it was returned to the scullery. "You should have ordered roast mutton, sir," the waiter said. "It's boneless."

Uncle Sam, Director

By Ralph E. Renaud.

New York.

EXCURSIONS and alarms continue to punctuate Uncle Sam's venture into the arts, especially the theatrical arts. Of late the excursions are developing into brisk skirmishes along the whole Broadway front and the alarms expanding into heavy explosions. For better or for worse, Uncle Sam is in the show business, but the other parties to the arrangement seem unwilling, as Clark and McCullough once put it, "to love, honor and Oh Baby." Indeed, a few disillusioned observers have begun to wonder whether the United States Government really has the true artistic temperament.

By the book, everything ought to be lovely. Under the outworn capitalist system, which is still represented by the feeble vestiges of the grasping commercial theater (now enjoying its best season in ten years), a producer with 75 or 80 millions to toss around and with no responsibility for success or failure, would consider himself in Seventh Heaven. But the spot which Uncle Sam has somehow got himself into is much too warm for that. As it is, he can only mop his perspiring brow and ask plaintively, "Is my face red?"

Ordinary Americans in the Federal theater project insist that it is at least a violet pink. By and large there is still a considerable number of just ordinary Americans within the movement but they are airily dismissed by the proletarians as "a residue of the extreme right." This doesn't mean that the proletarians regard them as right in any sense except wrong.

THE proletarians in the Federal theater project may not be in the majority, but they are far and away the most active. They even send around a devoted little band of barricaders to the performances to cheer or boo as the occasion seems to warrant. They are now about 5,000 theater people on the WPA pay roll in New York with 31 producing units organized as 49 performinds groups.

The Communists, following their pet program of organizing all relief projects, insist on regarding these units as cells. They are accused by their opponents not only of getting a strangle hold on the management, but of not having to struggle very hard to do it. But the proletarians, on their part, emit raucous cries of "Fascist!" whenever they are not pleased, which is often. So there you are. But where?

The Federal writers' project, too, has broken out into a Red rash. Some of these writers, promptly described as Fascist and as promptly pushed into the discard, have charged you have to be a Communist to get on the pay roll and that the only suitable directors seem to be out-of-work Communist editors. However, it is quite understandable that a good many men on writers' relief should be Communists. The prices which most of them received for their writings before they went on relief would have made Communists out of anybody.

Under the old capitalist system a good many of them just wrote and wrote and wrote and never got paid for it. Under the new and improved Federal system they don't have to write any more and do get paid for it. If this is the arrangement, and it has been so charged in the public prints, it would be just plum foolish not to be a Communist. Moreover, the Communist writers point out that the Fascist writers aren't writing any more than they are, so what the deuce?

And in the Federal theater project the startling revelation has been made that the critics of Red tendencies are actually American Legion men. Think of that! Veterans, actually veterans — fellows who fought in the late war, or were willing to, old-fashioned stupids who still regard the American flag as partly blue and white! The nerve of them!

ATTENDANCE at the Federal theater project performances hasn't been very good in spite of the fact that the average charge is 55 cents. The actors in the first Federal road show, "Jefferson Davis," which was expected to do well in the South, are just back here after a flop that would have done credit to a buttonhole maker staging his first burlesque show.

None of the Government shows on Broadway has lasted long enough to get started, although the reviewers have often been more than kind. The reviews of the latest T. S. Eliot's "Murder in a Cathedral," were excellent, even though the critics seemed chiefly impressed with the fact that it was really possible to understand something written by the author of "The Wasteland." The play deals with the murder of Thomas a Becket in Canterbury Cathedral in 1170 and after the deed the good prelate's slayers step down to the footlights to justify the assassination. The previously mentioned little band of barricaders was present to cheer these sentiments as good Communist doctrine. And were their faces red when it was pointed out to them that the bishop's assassins were just a bunch of early-Gothic Fascists!

Sponsors of the Federal shows say the attendance would be better if they were allowed to advertise. By some quirk of Government finance they are permitted to waste money on anything except advertising. Consequently, they complain, nobody knows Uncle Sam's shows are going on. But there must be an error in that statement somewhere because, although the newspapers don't get a nickel out of these performances, their news columns are virtually turned over to the shows. There is nothing like a good row for making newspaper space, and there have been plenty of rows in the Federal theater project.

THERE was that nice, spanking row over "The Living Newspaper," for instance. It wasn't exactly a newspaper and it didn't live very long, but it was vigorous while it lasted. Mussolini in person was shown in one of the scenes, sassing Halie Selassie, or something like that. The State Department objected. Loud cries of "fascism" rent the empyrean. Elmer Rice, one of the best resigners in the business, resigned and that was that. "The Living Newspaper" never got to first base—it was just called out on bawls.

Then there was "Triple A Plowed Under," a title rather distinctly suggesting that the Federal theater project didn't like the Supreme Court decision. The cries of "communism" at this performance were within the play itself, for one of the scenes presented Earl Browder, head of the Communist Party in this country and well-known Red radio commentator, airing his opinions, oddly enough quite unfavorable, of the majority justices. That got a lot of space in the newspapers, too.

Then "The Class of '29" popped up. Some students in that sing a Russian song and pump for the Communists. But the lady who wrote it said she wasn't a Communist but an enrolled Democrat, and it was just too bad if people couldn't tell the difference. Moreover, she was Walter Lippmann's secretary and if the words of the Russian song were in praise of Stalinism she didn't know what they meant and just introduced them phonetically. That was a fairly good little row, also, and consumed quite a lot more newspaper space.

There is no more space in this particular article, however, to detail the rest of the rows. But if Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, Federal theater director, lives up to the tradition of her name she ought to be able to kick up a few more.

Bones in Lake May Solve Mystery of U. S. Agent

Baton, N. Mex., April 3 (AP).—Finding of bones in a lake prompted authorities tonight to believe solution was near of a mystery nearly six years old—the disappearance of Ray Sutton, 56, Federal prohibition agent, August 28, 1930.

An unidentified person led to their discovery in a northwestern New Mexico lake, located in a remote area. E. J. House, jr., chief of the State police, said frigid waters prevented efforts to recover the bones with diving apparatus.

Playing With Revolver, Boy, 11, Kills Mother

Passaic, N. J., April 3 (AP).—Michael Korotoff, 11-year-old grammar school student, shot his mother to death today with a revolver he was playing with in their home.

Detective Sergeant Thomas McCann said the boy admitted he fired the shot after his mother, Antoinette, had told him to put the gun away. Michael at first insisted she shot herself, McCann said, but changed his story under questioning.

Senate Group To Revise Nye War Profit Bill

Finance Committee Orders Revisions to Allow Greater Earnings.

By the Associated Press.

A drastic revision of the projected war profits bill to allow more profit and less restriction on industry, but to boost taxes sharply in the lower brackets, yesterday, was ordered by the Senate Finance Committee.

After receiving privately delivered testimony that essential wartime production might be stifled by too drastic war taxation, the committee ordered a redrafting of the measure put forward by the Senate Munitions Committee.

Where the munitions committee had proposed taking 99 per cent of individual income over $10,000 a year and all but about 3 per cent of corporate income, the finance committee decided on a graduated schedule higher in the lower brackets and reaching a top of 70 to 80 per cent.

Would Tax "Small Man."

The committee decided definitely that the levy on the "small man" during wartime should be hiked. Chairman Connally (Democrat), Texas, of the finance sub-committee handling the bill, said the committee contemplated doubling schedules in lower brackets.

The Munitions Committee had proposed that military compulsion be placed upon industry to produce a peak of war materials. Connally said that these provisions already had been modified by the Military Committee and might undergo even more modification at the hands of his committee.

The Finance sub-committee was instructed to begin its redrafting work Monday. Connally said the committee expected to report out a revised bill this session, but that it was problematical whether it would be acted upon. Some of the Munition Committee members, however, have indicated their intention of bringing it to a vote even if they have to offer it as an amendment to the Administration revenue measure.

Cautioned on Severity.

Ralph W. Brown, special assistant to the general counsel of the Treasury, was disclosed to have cautioned the Finance Committee that too drastic taxation would mean that neither individuals nor corporations would seek to earn money to be seized wholly by the Government.

He told the committee during executive hearings, the "severity" of the tax "raises the question whether an attempt is not being made to regulate the internal affairs of corporations, which regulation is reserved by the Constitution to the States." The committee decided to increase war levies on "the small man" after Parker told it:

"I feel that this bill won't bring in the revenue. It is not to my mind heavy enough on the small man. Here is a man with an income of $5,000. The tax proposed is only to be $340 against $80 at present. A man with $5,000 (net) income in these times in England pays almost $630."

Changes from the original proposals for tax deductions and gift and estate taxes also were decided upon by the Finance Committee.

Sought Gift Tax Boost.

Where the Munitions Committee proposed elimination of many deductions allowable under peace time income taxes, the sub-committee was directed to impose taxes only on net incomes with normal deductions allowable.

The original measure proposed boosts in gift and estate taxes, but Connally said the sub-committee was instructed to make no change from existing schedules because estates were not subject to variation by war business.

The Munitions Committee bill barred deductions from losses on sale of capital assets, but taxed gains from such sales. The Finance Committee proposed that "reasonable loss" deductions be allowed on capital transactions.

Railroad Dedicates Land for Underpass

Dedication of the necessary land to carry an underpass under the railroad at Eighteenth street northeast was received by the Commissioners yesterday from the Real Estate & Improvement Co., of Baltimore City, which holds the railroad company real estate.

The dedicated property is to provide a street which shall run north from New York and West Virginia avenues. Condemnation proceedings are to be instituted to acquire other land at Seventeenth street needed to complete the program. The new street will be named Montana avenue.

Austria Stirred As Semitic Row Is Spread Anew

Catholic Union Says Spirit of Jews Threatens Social Life.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, April 3.—Catholic declarations on the position of Jews in Austria — pronouncements which drew responses from Jewish newspapers—raised the Semestic question to one of national importance tonight.

Advocating "governmental measures and personal co-operation," the Federal Union of Catholic German Youth has declared the Jewish spirit "threatens to corrode our economic and social life."

Soon afterward came the blast of Catholic labor unions, through their leader, Leo Kunschak, that unless "common-sense solutions" are found now, "infuriated passions of aroused Austrians" will ultimately rise against the "destructive work of Jews."

The Jewish press promptly filling the breach, asserted "there is no Jewish question in the sense Kunschak outlined."

"We are citizens, pay our taxes, and work for the building up of economic life," said Die Stimme.

The papers ascribed the agitation to the example set by Nazi Germany, although Jewish leaders are at a loss to explain the apparent leadership of Catholics in drawing public attention to Jewish influences.

"We see in Kunschak's remarks an attempt to create a problem artificially and develop it, so the groundwork can be laid for the principles of 'Mein Kampf,'" Die Stimme continued, referring to the title of Adolph Hitler's autobiography.

Contrary to the defensive statements came later assertions from Bishop Alois Hudak rector of the Combined Germany National Institutione in Rome, and the Jesuit Father Georg Bichlmair that "the Jewish question is a national and folk problem."

"Since the collapse in 1918 the Jewish question has been an urgent one, but has now, through principles of the Third Reich, reached a climax," said Father Bichlmair. "We Austrian Catholics do not wish to treat the Jews in any un-Christian way but that does not hinder us from saying openly that we prescribe certain definite rights or limitations for them."

Local officials of the Condor Airline said the craft would reach Rio de Janeiro tomorrow morning.

Townsend Plan Inquiry Shifts To West Coast

Move Follows Receipt of 'Hot Tip' by House Investigators.

Investigation of the Townsend old-age pension plan will shift to the West Coast within a few days, when Representatives Gavagan (Democrat), New York, a member of the House investigating committee, and a group of committee probers, will go to California to take depositions of witnesses.

The move followed receipt by the committee, headed by Representative Bell (Democrat), Missouri, of what was termed a "hot tip" concerning Townsend plan activities.

Meanwhile, Townsendites in the House admitted that facts thus far revealed in the investigation were a severe blow to the movement and to the possibilities of legislation.

"If the investigation continues as disastrously as it has begun, it goes without saying that the confidence of Townsend club members in their leadership will be shaken," said Representative McGroarty (Democrat), California, author of the Townsend bill.

While the investigation continues on the Coast, agents of the committee will continue their inquiries into the activities of the Washington office. The committee is not expected to resume hearings for two weeks.

Plans of the committee were delayed when certified public accountants found that the books of the Townsend organization were so "muddled" that they could not present facts concerning receipts and expenditures.

The committee has an appropriation of $50,000 to conduct the inquiry.

Professor Objects, Works Out $2 Fine

Austin, Tex., April 3 (AP).—J. Frank Dobie, University of Texas professor, "worked out" fines of $2 today as a protest against parking regulations.

The tousled gray-haired author of Texas folklore came to court with a book and a quantity of tobacco for his heavy pipe and pleaded guilty to three traffic counts.

For driving past a stop sign, he paid a $3 fine, explaining "I think the stop sign law ought to be enforced."

Then Corporation Court Judge Jesse Maxwell fined him $1 each on two charges of parking too long near the university.

"I believe it is a bad law," Dobie said, "but I'm pleading guilty. I am protesting against a law which does not permit a man to park on a street where parking space is more than sufficient to handle the demand."

Chief of Police R. D. Tharp took Dobie into custody, but instead of placing him in jail, assigned him to traffic department office work, permitting him to dispose of the $2 fine in one day.

Wagner Offers $876,000,000 Housing Plan

Would Set Up a Permanent Authority to Make Loans, Grants.

obstacles in the way of relieving the shortage of decent, safe and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and the several States and their political subdivisions have been and now are unable to aid in remedying this condition without financial assistance."

The only immediate appropriation carried in the bill is for $50,000,000 for grants during the next fiscal year and $1,000,000 for capital stock of the authority. In addition, the authority would be authorized to borrow $100,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for its first year's operation. The appropriation carried in the bill would be in addition to the budget setup suggested to Congress by President Roosevelt.

During the succeeding three years the authority would be authorized to issue $150,000,000 in bonds each year. In addition the bill authorizes an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and $100,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1939, and a similar amount for the year ending June 30, 1940.

Provides for Taxes.

Four members of the authority, in addition to the Secretary of the Interior, would be appointed by the President with consent of the Senate and each would receive a salary of $10,000. Members would be appointed for terms of one, two, three and four years, but after expiration of the initial terms, the terms would each be five years. The President would designate the chairman of the commission.

The bill makes no provision for co-ordination of Federal housing activities, but it carries a provision that the President may transfer the duties of other housing organizations to the new group.

Property of the authority would be exempt from normal taxation, but the bill carries a provision that, in lieu of taxes, fees may be paid to local and State taxing units. One of the difficulties of the present housing program has resulted from complaints of cities and States that they pay no taxes. Comptroller General McCarl has ruled that without legislation fees in lieu of taxes are not legal.

Condemnation Provided.

The bill also provides specifically that the authority may obtain land for demonstration projections through condemnation. The question of the PWA's authority to condemn land for housing recently was carried to the Supreme Court, where the case was dismissed on motion of the Government. The authority, pending sale of a demonstration project, would be permitted to lease it to a public housing authority or a public housing society. Such a society could be composed, under the measure, of a group of individuals within the low income class, but they would not be permitted to make a profit.

The only definition of low income contained in the bill is the statement that a person with a low income is one who is unable to afford to rent a privately built dwelling. Persons buying Government-built houses must guarantee to maintain low-rent levels.

The bill also provides that wages paid for construction work on houses financed in whole or in part by the Government must be paid for at wages prevailing in the community.

Doesn't Affect FHA.

The measure in no way affects the Federal Housing Administration or other Government lending or insurance agencies. Congress already has passed a bill extending the power of the FHA to insure modernization loans. It is expected that the present law covering mortgage insurance will be allowed to stand without change.

The Wagner bill has the endorsement of organized labor, which has been working for a new Federal housing program.

In explaining his bill to the Senate, Wagner said that it is estimated that the public funds made available under the measure, if used alone, could build only 245,000 family units during the next four years. If used in connection with private financing, he estimated that 600,000 units could be built.

Sees 875,000 Units.

"The construction of 125,000 family units per year with partial Federal assistance, and that aid predominately in the form of sound, interest-bearing loans, should provide the groundwork, along with the operation of other Federal agencies such as the FHA, for the development of 875,000 family units each year by private industry alone," Wagner said. "During the next four years every dollar of Federal grant should mean $48 of private expenditure for home building with its connected economic improvement."

Some students of the housing situation have expressed the opinion that little use will be made of the privilege of obtaining loans and grants from the Government. Heretofore, the Government has taken the complete responsibility for construction and operation of housing projects. Few communities at present have housing authorities equipped to take advantage of the plan proposed in the bill. In many instances it would be necessary to change local or State laws to make this possible.

Abandoned Yacht Puzzles Salvagers

Kingston, Jamaica, April 3 (AP).—The question of how to dispose of the schooner yacht Kaydet, owned by Homer B. Millard, of Washington, D. C., was still puzzling shipping officials today.

The Canadian freighter Cavalier picked the yacht up last Sunday after it had been abandoned by its owner. From San Juan, Puerto Rico, Capt. Millard wirleased "not interested."

The Cavalier towed the Kaydet in the Caribbean Sea for a while, then abandoned it, firing the boat to prevent any danger to navigation.

The firing job was apparently not successful, for the United States Fruit Co.'s San Benito reported it has the yacht in tow. The fruit freighter declared the craft is "apparently in good condition except for 2 feet of water in her cabin."

Elmer Twitchell on Sweepstakes and College Educations.

Elmer Twitchell today announced that he had given a large sum to Harvard, Yale and Princeton for the erection of new buildings to take care of all the boys for whose education the winnings of Irish sweepstakes are to be largely used in this country.

• • • •

"It is plain from the declarations of all sweepstakes winners that the education of their young is to be a main and immediate purpose in life," said Mr. Twitchell today.

• • • •

"More room in our colleges will be needed, and I have undertaken to form an Irish Sweepstakes Wing at Harvard and an Aintree Quadrangle at Yale. I had planned a Golden Miller Foundation at Princeton and N. Y. U., but have postponed this until the fall."

• • • •

Elmer paused to see if the pun had made an impression.

• • • •

"The Sweepstakes Wing at Harvard will be known as the Elmer Twitchell Winning Ticket Wing and will be reserved for the education of the sons of winners of $50,000 and up," continued Mr. Twitchell. "The plans call for a library to be known as Over-the-Jumps Hall and for an enormous athletic ground to be called Leaper's Oval.

• • • •

"At Yale the buildings comprising the Aintree Quadrangle will include Happy-Days Hall, We-Need-It Towers and Never-Won-Yet Archway, in view of the fact that people who send in those names always win something.

• • • •

"I am giving money for a dining hall to be known as Grand National Commons and a lecture hall, as yet unnamed, to be devoted to the advancement of cultural training among the progeny of all men named Max Klotz, who win sweepstakes prizes."

• • • •

Mr. Twitchell seemed to feel that he had made a great contribution to the needs of a nation.

THE ANIMAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION ANNOUNCES
National HUMANE SUNDAY, April 19
(Opening "Be Kind to Animals Anniversary Week" 20-25)

A true Christian is actively kind to God's speechless creatures; he abstains to his utmost from practices, commodities and amusements imposing suffering upon animal life intrusted to his dominion. He is kind to children by uplifting their characters and giving them happiness through teaching them kindness to animals. He obeys his Savior's injunctions: "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful" (Luke 6:36), and receive the reward of the fifth Beatitude, "Blessed are the merciful" (Matt. 5:7).

HUMANE SUNDAY is the opportunity and obligation of preachers and Christian leaders to obey this command of the Master and receive His blessing. The Animal Protective Association will furnish upon request literature and suggestions for ministers and church school superintendents of various departments.

Many Enter Bradley Trial Meet Today

By Francesca McKenney.

Red and white flags which will wave gayly in the bright spring sunshine rapidly are being placed as markers for the various courses over which hunter trials and point-to-point races will be run in the near future in Maryland and Virginia.

Members of Capital society always are anxious to don their bright sports costumes and will drive many miles to see fine horseflesh and witness expert horsemanship.

An enthusiastic gallery will gather at Bradley Farms today to see the annual hunter trials of the Riding and Hunt Club hounds, in which there will be nearly 20 entries in each class. The trials will be held, rain or shine, and arrangements have been made for luncheon at the farmhouse preceding them.

In addition to the participants from the Riding and Hunt Club, which sponsors the meet each year, will be riders from Loudoun County, Fairfax, Middleburg, Warrenton, Fort Myer and Redlands Hunt Club.

Rides Ponies.

Young Miss Margaret Hill, 13-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Hill, is certain to draw attention and applause as she negotiates the difficult jumps on her mother's horse, Questionnaire. Until recently she has been riding ponies and has distinguished herself as an outstanding young horsewoman at the various horse shows in which she has ridden during the past four or five years.

Three years ago Miss Hill rode in the hunter trials for the first time and two years ago placed third, riding her little pony, Good News, against adult riders on their big hunters.

Judges for the trials today will be Mr. Sterling Larrabee, M. F. H. of the Old Dominion hounds; Mr. Augustus Riggs, M. F. H. of the Howard County hounds, and Col. T. J. Johnson, United States Army. Mr. H. H. Semmes is in charge of the committee on arrangements.

Proceeds of the event will go to the Riding and Hunt Club hounds to assure the hunts for next season, as will those of four horse shows to be held on the show grounds of the Meadowbrook Club, May 16, June 13, July 11, and August 8, which are in charge of Dr. J. M. Greear, jr.

Four Races.

There are four point-to-point races near Washington which draw thousands of people from all over the country.

My Lady's Manor, at Monkton, Md., which will be held a week from today is the first of the series and is followed by the Grand National on April 18, at Hereford, Md. On April 25 the Maryland Hunt Cup will be held at Glyndon, Md., and on May 2, the Virginia Gold Cup, at Warrenton, Va., will be run over the course of Mr. and Mrs. Alex B. Hagner.

Many feel that the course over which the Maryland Hunt Cup is run is by far the stiffest post and rail course in the country and many owners of fine hunters hesitate to enter their horses because it is so hazardous.

Following this hunt, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, will be the guests of honor at a tea to be given by Mr. and Mrs. James Bruce at their home Leisure Hill, for which invitations have been issued.

In May horse lovers will be able to attend the National Capital Horse Show at Bradley Farms, an outstanding event of the late social season of Washington, which is concluded with a hunt ball. This show draws to a close the large spring events near the Capital where the horse reigns supreme.

Miss Bell and Miss Jones wore gowns of yellow lace in the same design and carried Joanna Hill roses. They wore narrow bands of flowers over the top and across the back of their hair.

Dr. R. H. Allen, of Washington, was best man. The ushers were Dr. Paul G. Minnemann, Mr. John Darner and Mr. Dudley Smith, also of this city, and Mr. Hassell Thigpen, brother of the bridegroom, of Storrs, Conn.

The wedding music was played by Miss Isabel Squibb, organist, and Miss Hicks, violinist, both friends of the bride. Their numbers were Bach's "Arioso" and two selections from "Orpheus."

Reception Followed.

A reception at the University Women's Club followed the wedding. The bride's aunt, Mrs. Edgar Jones, and the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Clayton M. Thigpen, received with the bridal couple.

Immediately after the reception the couple left for a wedding trip to Bermuda. The bride chose for her traveling costume a tailored gray flannel suit with a rose blouse, gray accessories and a corsage of violets and roses. Mr. Thigpen and his bride will be at home after April 22 at the Colonial Village Apartments, Clarendon, Va.

Finely-Sifted Face Powder Adds Charm to Chiffon Frock

By Mignon.

THIS is a chiffon year. Women have worn chiffon evening gowns all winter and they are going to wear them all summer. They are even planning chiffon suits with little white organdie blouses. When women go that feminine there have to be cosmetics to match the gowns—something extremely soft and feminine. One company has a face powder which the women who love chiffon—and that just about takes in all of them—should investigate.

It is unnecessary to say that a powder which would remind you of chiffon would be very finely sifted. This means sifted through fine silk many times. I have not seen this powder manufactured, but I have tried it and I have an idea that it is a laborious process that got it to the point of its eiderdown consistency. It comes in small and large boxes, so if you do not know about it and want to try it out, you can get a small box the first time.

I once asked a physician if another physician was "a good doctor." His answer was: "That is a strange question, but the only way we ever know is by the company they keep. If a doctor keeps good professional company he is at least considered a good physician." (I suppose the physician I asked never ran into the other doctor's mistakes.) It is pretty much that way with cosmetics—if you see a good reliable, manufacturer's name on a product you feel that, unless something terrible has happened to it, it is pretty sure to be an acceptable thing.

I have never found any complaint to make of any product made by the company that produces this face powder, so here it is and if you are interested I'll give you the name.

If you want to know where you can purchase any article mentioned in this column telephone The Washington Post, National 4200, Branch 323.

Orange Juice Value As Drink Is Shown In Guinea Pig Test

Fresh orange juice is a slightly more wholesome drink than commercial tomato juice, and a much more wholesome drink than commercial tomato juice cocktails, according to recent experiments on guinea pigs made by D. M. Somers and M. D. Sweetman and reported in the current issue of the United States Agricultural Experiment Station Record. None of the animals receiving the orange juice or the plain commercial tomato juice developed recognizable symptoms of scurvy, but their growth was somewhat better on the orange juice. Scurvy from mild to severe cases developed in all of the animals fed with the commercial tomato juice cocktails.

Child's Ability To Make Chums Important One

Youngster Who Plays Alone May Present Greatest Problem for Parents.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

IT IS NOT the noisy, active child, always up to mischief, playing eagerly with other children, rejoicing in change, and leaving home without a pang of regret, who need give anxiety to his parents. As a rule a child of this kind adjusts himself with ease to people and places and has no trouble in finding his way about the world.

Must Make Friends.

But the child who loves the society of older people, who is able to amuse himself quietly for days on end, who clings to home and mother and is never happier than when with his parents, sharing their interests and occupations, is the one who needs thought. In all probability his parents will not notice for a long time that he is in any way out of the ordinary. He is so easy to get along with and fits into the home so well, that they pride themselves on having produced a satisfactory human being.

Only later when the child starts school and should be making friends of his own age, do they realize that he is unable to adjust himself to his contemporaries.

Habits Hard to Break.

Children should not live exclusively with adults even when they are very young. At some time they must learn to mix with other children, and the sooner they begin the more likely are they to make the satisfactory equation with life. The habits of early childhood are very hard to break. The child who, up to the time he is 6 or even 5 is used to getting his own games, never sharing his toys or making the adjustment necessary to playing with others, will find it difficult if not impossible to get along easily with other children. Parents cannot live forever, and some day he will find himself a very lonely person.

Gloves, Bags, Shoes In Easter 'Alliance'

Matching Accessories Are Spring Feature.

New York (AP).—Shoes, bags and gloves have formed an "entente cordiale" in Easter fashions.

Though international politics may be in an unsettled state, the fashion world has pulled footwear, hand coverings and money pouches together in a triple alliance which, it declares, should "stick."

Not all of the three need be carved from the same map of material. They need only to be linked in color or similarity of design. Harmony is the main idea and here are some of the ways it is achieved:

Shoes and bag of the new "russet" calf, and russet felt gloves worn with a brown or black suit. Gray suede shoes with brown alligator toe trimmings and heels, alligator bag and gray suede gloves with a gray suit. Shoes of navy gabardine with straps, toe trimmings and heels of russet calf, bag of the same leather and navy blue doeskin gloves with a midnight blue suit.

MARY HAWORTH Says:

Long Engagements Almost Inevitably Taper Off Into One-Sided Loss of Interest.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a very dear friend whom I have known for 20 years. He has always been exceedingly kind and good to me. At one time he asked me to marry him, but circumstances made marriage impossible. Until recently he had been the soul of devotion, but now he has changed; his manner is more distant. He calls on me once a week now, whereas it used to be three or four times a week. I happen to know there is another woman, because recently he took a trip with her. He doesn't know I am aware of this, and when he does come to see me he is loving and kind. Yet, his attitude is changed.

Mary Haworth

* * * *

I am dependent on his help. Should I tell him what I know? Or, in order to keep his friendship, should I let things ride and see what the outcome will be? I love him and I know from what friends say that he cares for me. Once I spoke in a sarcastic way about another woman and he became angry and accused me of being a very jealous woman.

* * * *

What should I do? I cannot think of giving him up entirely, yet I know about the other woman. Please answer soon and give me your candid advice. Very sincerely,

UNHAPPY WIDOW.

Walk Softly Here.

DEAR UNHAPPY WIDOW: Nothing is to be gained by telling the man that you know of his friendship for the other woman. In fact, much might be lost in so doing. Already you are under suspicion in his mind of being a very jealous woman; and it may be your jealousy which has created this rift in a long-time friendship. At any rate, it goes a long way toward explaining why he hasn't seen fit to mention his newly found friend to you. I suppose he reasons that if you knew of it, you would, at the very least, have biting comments to make; and, at the worst, create a disagreeable scene. The average man will resort to almost any deceit to avoid the possibility of becoming involved in a scene with a jealous woman.

* * * *

Moreover, his long-time friendship for you cannot be construed as investing you with any possessive claims either on his society or his single-minded devotion. He is within his rights in paying attentions to another woman, even to the extent of courting her with marrying intent. I have no idea what you mean in saying you are dependent on his help; whether you mean he has been giving you financial assistance, or whether he has been giving you the benefit of his business advice and social influence. In either case and whatever you mean, you will need to walk very softly in the present situation if you wish to continue as a recipient of his favors. If you must have a certain amount of friendly protection from him, regardless of what his other interests are, it behooves you to observe a disarming hands-off policy in regard to his private life—particularly now.

* * * *

Since you love him and look to him for help and he has long seemed to care for you; and since both of you apparently are free to marry, it is difficult to understand why you haven't the wit to maneuver him to the altar before now. Long engagements or their equivalent in the form of friendships like this one almost inevitably taper off into a one-sided loss of interest, with one or the other eventually developing a romantic interest in some newcomer to the scene. When such a crisis arrives, the person who finds himself no longer all-in-all to the other has no choice but to adjust himself to the new order of things as amiably and as philosophically as possible. The time is past for doing anything else.

Visitor Sees Opportunities for Women Here As Far Better Than Those of Other Countries

Miss Geertruii van Eeghan, of Amsterdam, Compares Positions.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN in America as seen through Dutch eyes were revealed yesterday by Miss Geertruii Margaretha van Eeghan, of Amsterdam, who has spent four months in this country and who recently came to Washington to stay a few days at the Alva Belmont House, headquarters of the National Woman's Party.

"Women here have a better chance for participation in public life than those of my own country or of any I have ever visited," this blue-eyed flaxen-haired girl said yesterday. "Here you have no class restrictions. You can choose your own work. In Holland, whether you are a welfare worker, a teacher, typist or cook depends largely on whether you belong to the upper, middle or lower class. The same thing is true in other countries in Europe."

Middle Class in Professions.

She explained girls from the "first families" over there rarely take part in public life at all. "If they want to do something outside the home, charity work is about the only thing open to them. The ones who are educated sometimes go into the professions, but this is the exception, rather than the rule."

Girls from the middle class are the ones who generally attend the universities and prepare for law, medicine, teaching and various business pursuits—such as secretarial work, costume designing and interior decoration—she said. "Domestic jobs generally fall to girls in the lowest class; so you can see what a tremendous advantage a woman has n America. No matter what her background is, she can usually get an education if she wants it. Then she can go into the work that interests her most. Oh, of course, she may have some difficulty finding employment at first; but at least she is not circumscribed by class distinction. That is why I think the woman who must work, or who wants to work, is lucky to live in America."

MISS GEERTRUII VAN EEGHAN.

Miss van Eeghan's ideas along this line are not based entirely on what she has observed in Holland, but on a wide range of experience in a number of countries. She attended school (Cheltenham) in England before she entered the University of Amsterdam. After graduation from the latter, she worked for a woman's peace organization in Switzerland, then for the Junior Red Cross in Austria. She also spent some time in Germany.

As a result of what she has seen of women and their chances in those countries, she believes women there look to American women for inspiration.

Married Women Dismissed.

She said Germany's back-to-the-home movement had done much to mould public opinion in her own country; that in increasing numbers married women were being dismissed from government positions and that the right of any woman to work was being questioned by some employers. She believes, however, women throughout Europe will eventually retrieve their former rights and gain new ones, "but the fight will be hard," she said.

Revealing some of her impressions of American women, Miss van Eeghan pointed out, "They have a much wider range of interests and are much better informed than I expected. From what I observed, they have a higher intellectual standard than the men I have met here. What bothers me about them is they all seem to dress alike."

Chinese School Teachers Fight Books Revision

School teachers of Hopei Province have issued a long manifesto protesting against the Japanese demand that the textbooks in Chinese schools be revised and anti-Japanese material eliminated.

The manifesto states that such a revision would only further arouse the indignation of the students of China as well as to aggravate present trouble. It declares that these textbooks have been especially prepared to revive the Chinese race and therefore should be left as they now stand.

SUBSTITUTE SWEETHEART

By Priscilla Wayne

Ruth Dayton, 18, orphaned pretty department store clerk, has been hired by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bradley, of Denver, to impersonate their niece, June Bradley, whom she greatly resembles.

She has gone to Chicago with the Bradleys to the bedside of June's stepbrother, Jim Bradley, who has been perhaps fatally injured in an automobile accident. The Bradleys have explained to Ruth that June is ill and quarantined—that her impersonation is to bring comfort to a dying man. Ruth agrees because the pay will help to keep her 20-year-old brother, Jerry, in medical school.

CHAPTER THREE.

THE MAN on the bed was young, handsome, interesting. Those facts could be substantiated at a glance, even despite the disfiguring bandages about his head that completely covered his eyes.

He had dark, swarthy, almost gypsy like skin that even the pallor incident to his injuries could not entirely bleach.

Mrs. Bradley took his hand effusively, found a spot between face bandages to kiss. "We came the minute we got word of your accident."

Mr. Bradley's voice sounded hale, hearty, happy—not like the nervous voice it had seemed only a few minutes before. "Well, Jim, shame on you, getting bruised up this way. How does the other fellow look?"

"I guess, Uncle, that the truck is pretty well battered," Jim said.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley were pushing Ruth forward. "Here's someone else you'll be wanting to talk with—June."

It seemed to Ruth's sensitive eyes that a puzzled look came over Jim's face—the part of his face she could see below bandages. "June? Of course I want to talk to June. I didn't know that she could come—that she could get away—from, school."

Ruth went forward, propelled quickly by Mrs. Bradley, dropped down close to the bed, kissed Jim, held close to his hand, saying nothing.

"June it's wonderful to have you here. Simply wonderful. Worth being battered by a truck just to hear your voice. Say something. Do."

"Jim," Ruth said, "Jim." His kiss had sent the strangest sensation pulsing through her, even his voice wakened emotions that she scarcely knew existed.

"She's so happy and so excited at seeing you that she can't talk, Jim," Mrs. Bradley interposed quickly.

"Are you better, Jim?" Ruth could scarcely have recognized her own voice. She knew that the Bradleys expected something of her, knew that the sick man expected her to talk. But she was overwhelmed. Mrs. Bradley's chatter filled the awkward conversational gap.

They chatted a few minutes. Jim's vibrant fingers that sent tingles to the very root of her heart, carefully felt Ruth's lips, her eyes, her cheeks, her hair. "It's been almost six months since I saw you," Jim said, laughing a little at the word "saw," and now I can see you only through my finger tips. Well, you feel very pretty, June."

"June's a mighty beautiful young woman, Jim." Mrs. Bradley's voice was oily soft, like silk. "She's getting prettier every day."

Come Back.

"Is she as beautiful as she feels?" Jim laughed at his own question. Ruth's heart pounded at his words.

"More beautiful. She's growing maturely beautiful now."

"Eighteen isn't so mature," Jim said fondly. There were little faint beads of perspiration on his forehead.

"Will you come back—this evening?"

"If the nurse says we may," Ruth agreed, looking up at the young woman who had re-entered the room. She smiled back at Ruth. "We'll see. I'll let you know this afternoon whether he'll be able to see you tonight."

"I'll get up and find my clothes if you don't let me see her," Jim threatened.

Mr. Bradley patted his shoulder. "We'll see about that. We're here to help you get well and we'll not permit you to do anything rash."

Following a swift impulse, Ruth leaned over Jim, kissed him again. "Be very, very quiet, dear, then the nurse will let me see you again."

"I'll not move," he promised.

Outside Jim's room Mr. and Mrs. Bradley were frankly jubilant with the succes of their plan. Mrs. Bradley was spokesman. "We'll go now to our rooms. I'll ask them to let you have the suite next to mine," turning to June. "Get rested and tidied up a bit. Then we'll have lunch."

Alone in the handsome room assigned to her, Ruth got ready for luncheon. Certainly she had passed the first ordeal, had come through with flying colors. But she was not overconfident.

Wealthy Girl.

It was something, though, that meeting the injured man had allayed her fears. She felt in quite a friendly mood when she heard Mrs. Bradley tap at the door.

"Come in."

Mrs. Bradley had donned an afternoon dress, long, rather drapy. She appeared handsome, at ease.

"Do I change?" Ruth asked in dismay. "I thought maybe this dress would be all right. It's so pretty."

"Better change," Mrs. Bradley advised. "Remember you're a very wealthy girl. The servants will be expecting you to act the part.

"Maybe there'll even be callers. I bought at least one afternoon dress for you. We'll buy more when we get the chance."

Mr. Bradley came in. He was freshly shaved and dressed, most of the worried look had gone from his eyes.

"You performed just right," he told Ruth. "Don't forget you're a loving, anxious sister. You'll naturally be solicitous for your brother's comfort.

Mrs. Bradley had some advice to give her. "If you get into hot water, conversationally speaking, you can always back right out of it by telling Jim he's too ill to talk and that he must rest."

"I think, Clara, that we won't have much to worry about, at least for a few days. It seems to me that nurse is a rather determined person. She'll not let Jim overtax his strength."

Queer Pair.

Ruth studied this queer, yet strangely fascinating pair as they chatted on. It seemed to her that each felt a secret exultation that perhaps the nephew was really more ill than they had been led to expect by the chauffeur's report.

"I'm certainly a suspicious Susan," she hold herself. "Here I've accepted this position. I'm in the employ of these people, yet I go around doubting them like this. I should be ashamed. Certainly Jim Bradley seems to be everything they said he was."

The afternoon passed uneventfully. A few callers came to inquire about Jim's condition. Mr. and Mrs. Bradley met them. Ruth was included, and those of the callers who had known June in the past seemed to accept the substitute as a matter of course.

It was a thrill, too, to Ruth, to discover in the suite assigned to her, June's evidently, some of the pictures of the girl for whom she substituted. One or two of the pictures had been taken in recent years. Her resemblance to the girl was striking, almost uncanny, Ruth decided.

The same reddish hair. The same directly searching, wide apart eyes, the same high forehead, the same gently curving cheeks, the same rather large, handsome mouth.

Ruth had a strange feeling as though, in the brief hours under this roof she had actually become the elusive, mysterious June Bradley.

Jim Calls.

Late in te afternoon the nurse came to Ruth's room. "Mr. Bradley wonders if you'd care to come and sit with him a while? He's feeling very fine this afternoon. Could you?"

"Of course I could. Now? Does he want me to come now?"

"Does he want Mr. Bradley and me to come?" It was the voice of Clara Bradley from the doorway. Ruth felt a quick suspicion that she was being watched, every minute of the time.

The nurse was quite frank. "If you please, not this afternoon. Mr. Bradley seems much better, but we mustn't overtax him."

"I'm not sure that he ought to see even Miss June," Mrs. Bradley worried.

"I'll not let Miss June stay long," the nurse turned, to go back to her patient. "You'll come very soon?"

"Yes."

After the nurse had gone, Ruth turned to Mrs. Bradley. She shrank, somehow, from what the older woman would say. She had reason to fear.

There was something very forthright in Clara Bradley's instructions. "Go. But watch your step. Remember, don't betray by word or act that you are not June Bradley. I promise you, it will be just too bad if you break faith with us."

And with that scantily veiled threat following her, Ruth went for the brief visit in the room of her make believe foster brother.

Recipes Show Wide Range in Rhubarb's Use

Many Submitted in Post's Contest Are Worthy of Special Mention.

MANY of the recipes entered in The Post's contest for rhubarb dishes last week, while not prize winners, are worthy of honorable mention. The following group should be especially popular because it offers a wide range of dishes that will appeal to the appetite during the spring and summer.

Spring Special.

Three medium-sized stalks rhubarb, one-half cup water, one pint crushed strawberries, three-fourths cup sugar, the juice of one lemon, one and one-half tablespoons of gelatin, six slices pineapple. Cut up the rhubarb, and stew in one-half cup water and one-fourth cup sugar until tender. Add the gelatin, which has been soaked five minutes in cold water; and dissolved over hot water. Crush the strawberries with the rest of the sugar; add the lemon juice, and mix with the rhubarb. Set in a cold place, in moulds, and when firm, serve on the sliced pineapple, with whipped cream.

MRS. E. C. McCLINTOCK,
1544 N. Edgewood street,
Clarendon, Va.

Rhubarb Pie.

Wash, peel and cut in half-inch cubes enough rhubarb to fill one pie pan and place in unbaked pie shell.

Mix one cup sugar and one-third cup flour well and add three-fourths cup thick cream. Pour over rhubarb.

Bake without top crust, or with lattice strips in a hot oven about five minutes. Reduce heat to moderate and bake about 20 minutes or until the sauce has thickened.

MRS. K. B. McPHERSON.

Rhubarb Almond Marmalade.

1 large pineapple cut in small pieces
4 cups rhubarb cut in small pieces
2 oranges, pulp cut in small pieces
Rind of 1 orange grated
8 cups sugar
¼ pound almonds, blanched and cut fine.

Let sugar and fruit stand overnight to draw out juices. Stir thoroughly and cook rapidly about ½ hour or until rather thick. This burns easily so it must be carefully stirred. The nuts should be added just before removing from the fire. Pour into sterlized jars and seal with paramin.

MRS. C. S. DOW.

Pineapple Juice with Rhubarb Sherbet.

3 cups pink rhubarb
¾ cup sugar
Juice of ½ lemon
1 teaspoon gelatin, soaked in ¼ cup cold water
1 egg white
1 tablespoon sugar.

Cook rhubarb with ¾ cup sugar until soft and put through a coarse sieve, add the soaked gelatin and stir well, add lemon juice, cool.

Put into the freezing tray, freeze to a mush. Remove from the tray and beat and fold in the stiffly beaten egg white to which 1 tablespoon sugar has been added. Return to freezing tray and freeze to a sherbet. When ready to serve, fill a sherbet glass ½ full of pineapple juice and put in a very generous serving of rhubarb sherbet.

MRS. CHARLES C. KENNON,
3120 Thirty-eighth street northwest.

Rhubarb Dumplings.

¼ cup flour
1½ cups sugar
5 cups diced, raw rhubarb
1 cup flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder.
½ tablespoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar.
2 teaspoons shortening.
1 egg.

Mix ¼ cup flour and 1½ cups sugar together. Add to rhubarb; mix well and place in large greased casserole (8 inches in diameter). Cover and cook in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) about 30 minutes.

Sift remaining flour with baking powder, salt and sugar. Cut in shortening as for biscuits. Beat egg slightly; add milk; stir into flour mixture until flour disappears. Drop from a teaspoon over hot rhubarb mixture; cover and steam about 20 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve warm. Serves 6 to 8 persons.

Note: Put a shallow pan under casserole to catch any juices that might escape.

MISS HELEN RICHTER,

Rhubarb Iced Tea.

Make tea for 6 portions. Stew 1 dozen medium-sized stalks of rhubarb with few sprigs of fresh mint, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 cups water till rhubarb is soft. Put through fine strainer, using spoon to press as much juice through as possible. Mix this with made teas (sweeten to taste) while warm and add lemon juice, if a tart is desired.

Place cracked ice in serving glasses and add to each a sprig of mint and a thin slice of orange. Pour in tea and mixed fruit juices and serve.

MRS. NELSON,

Miniature Eiffel Tower Displayed in Shoe Heel

New York (AP).—A new shoe heel was a wire miniature of the Eiffel Tower in Paris.

Other new heels were made of small polished walnut spheres, and glittering spheres of rhinestones, silver and gold.

Lily Pons, who has gone to Europe to sing in Monte Carlo's opera cycle, has fifty pairs of shoes this spring. About half of them are for special stage and screen use. Among the rest are high-heeled gold and silver evening pumps, heel-less boudoir slippers and boots.

Red Cherry Cup.

1 package cherry-flavored gelatin
1 cup warm water
1 cup canned cherry juice
2 cups canned red cherries

Dissolve gelatin in warm water. Add cherry juice and chill. When slightly thickened, fold in cherries. Turn into sherbert glasses and chill until firm. Serves 6.

Fish Important on Menu Next Week

This week's market survey shows that fresh fish is plentiful again and therefore back to a moderate price. If you have neglected to use fresh fish during the Lenten season because of its unusually high price, make up this menu omission next week by including baked white fish or fried butterfish in your fast day repasts.

Fish to Ease Last Lenten Days

Freezes That Have Kept Finny Tribe Scarce Are Over.

By Dorothea Duncan.

ONE more week of Lent and then the fast season will be over. Meat will assume a more prominent role on the menu. Sweet desserts, candies and other rich foods that have been "given up" for the past few weeks will be great favorites because of their extended vacation from the diet.

But there are still a few fast days for which to plan menus, and for these meatless days it is suggested that you try to introduce a few dishes that have not yet appeared during the Lenten season. It is not the absence of meat so much as the too fequent appeaance of the same type of meat substitute that is making your family look so breathlessly to the time when Lent will be over for another year.

Many women this year have clung to eggs, cheese and canned or salt fish dishes when meat was taboo, because the intense cold in January and February, the frozen streams, etc., caused a shortage of fresh fish, which naturally brought up the price of the fresh fish available. But now with better weather conditions and spring just around the corner, the supply of fresh fish is on the increase and the prices are becoming normal.

Almost everyones favorite—shad—is rather scarce even now and the price is a little high. Of the salt water fish, flounders, butterfish and croakers are plentiful and reasonable in price. The fresh water fish are coming in a plentiful supply. Perch, yellow and jack pike are excellent for frying, and white fish, which is in the market this weekend and should appear again next week, and rock fish are ideal for baking.

A delicious baked white fish cooked with a little white wine if served attractively from a platter decorated with crisp water cress, slices of tomato and lemon wedges should make every member of your family forget the absence of meat from the menu.

Baked Whitefish.

1 small onion, chopped
3 mushrooms, chopped
1 tablespoon parsley, chopped
1 cup domestic white wine
1 tablespoon butter
Salt and pepper

Place fish in baking dish, dot with butter, and add all ingredients. Bake in quick oven (400 degrees F.), baste frequently.

Baked White Fish.

1½ pounds white fish filets
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon minced chives or grated onion
1 green pepper or pimiento, minced
½ cup coarse bread crumbs
2 tablespoons melted butter
3 tablespoons water
¼ cup any domestic dry white wine

Butter a baking platter. Place the fish on it; then dust with the salt and pepper and sprinkle with lemon juice. Strew the onion and green pepper over the top and sprinkle with the crumbs and melted butter mixed. Pour the water and wine into a dish and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F., until the fish is tender and the crumbs are brown. Allow about 30 minutes for fish sliced an inch thick. Baste twice with the drippings in the pan. Serve with slices of lemon.

Red Caps Delightful Change From Meat

You will find red caps a delightful change from meat. They are best served with a green vegetable topped with an intriguing sauce.

To prepare, remove stems from large mushrooms. Dot with butter and place under broiler flame (hot) for one minute. Remove from heat and fill with a mixture of buttered dry crumbs, minced onion and crumbled Roquefort cheese. Sprinkle heavily with paprika and return to oven to melt cheese. Serve at once.

Desert Warriors Thrive on Bread

THE late T. E. Lawrence, the English soldier, diplomat and writer who engineered and directed the Arabian revolt against the Turks during the World War, has given us many illuminating bits of information on the dietary of these Arabian fighters in his book, "Seven Pillars of Wisdom."

With them day and night for years, sharing their hardships, their amusements, dressing as one of them, living as they did on the march and in camp, Lawrence perhaps was better able than any other man of this time to report the effects of their diet on the stamina and physique of the tribesmen.

His monumental account of the Arabian revolt contains many reports of meals shared with desert warriors. And seldom does he fail to mention bread—the primitive, fire-baked unleavened loaf, so important to these lean, sturdy Semites who often went without food of any kind for long periods.

Often they traveled hundreds of miles with only short pauses for brief rests under the stars. But, when opportunities came for longer halts, tents would be pitched, fires built and, with flour from the camels' saddle bags and water from the oasis spring or waterhole, the servant boys mixed dough and baked the desert's "Staff of Life."

Simply, he tells of one typical rite, re-enacted time after time, as he lived with his beloved men of the East. "We ascended steadily till we rejoined the main leads of the pilgrim road. Along this we held our way till sunset, when we came into sight of the hamlet of Bir el Sheikh.

"In the first dark, as the supper fires were lighted, we rode down its wide open street and halted. Tofas went into one of the 20 miserable huts, and in a few whispered words and long silences, brought flour of which with water he kneaded a dough cake two inches thick and eight inches across. This he buried in ashes of the brushwood fire, provided for him by a Subli woman who he seemed to know. When the cake was warmed he drew it out of the fire and clapped it to shake off the dust; then we shared it together while Abdulla went away to buy himself tobacco."

Business Path For Woman Is Difficult One

IT IS A GOOD plan for mother every so often to take a complete vacation from home and the responsibilities of housekeeping, according to returns from a questionnaire recently circulated in 14 countries. In nine nations, women were little more than holding their own in the economic world. In two, they seemed to be definitely losing ground. In three, they had made slight gains.

The questionnaire on the economic status of women was circulated by the International Federation of Business and Professional Women.

Returns from the questionnaire showed that the Scandinavian countries, Finland, Czechoslovakia, Great Britain and her domin ons offered the most advantageous positions for women who work.

In the United States, there is evidence of a strong tendency to discriminate against married women. A study of 1,500 school systems made in 1930-1931 showed that 77 per cent of these did not employ married teachers and that only 37 per cent permitted women to teach after marriage. Between June, 1932, when section 213 of the federal economy act was adopted, which gives preference in the classified civil service to "persons other than married persons living with husband or wife (provided husband or wife is also a Government employe)" and February 1, 1935, there were wholesale dismissals from Federal service.

Of the 1,603 people dismissed, three-quarters were married women. Figures compiled by the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor show that women's wages lag far behind those of men. In nine important industries in which large numbers of women are employed, their compensation ranges from 45 to 84 per cent of the salaries paid to men in similar jobs.

Household Hints

To get white marks out of polished wood: Mix equal parts of olive oil, vinegar, methylated spirits. Keep in small bottle. Shake well, and rub hard upon the mark with a bit of flannel. When the mark is gone, polish with furniture polish.

To clean marble: Dust over surface with chloride of lime, mixed to a thin paste with cold water. Brush in with a short whiskbroom. Work well in and let stand a few hours, then work off again. Lump pumice stone used after the lime will help—use wet.

To remove stains from mahogany furniture: Rub well with a little olive oil—then wipe off. Then apply a few drops of spirits of wine and rub with a dry cloth.

Cement for China: One teaspoon of borax, one tablespoon of water. Put in oven and heat to the consistency of glue. Heat dish, and then apply mixture while hot.

Mildew stains may be removed by goods being persistently wet in buttermilk and then laid in the sun. Sometimes, however, it may be easier to use chloride of lime. Soak a little of the lime in cold water and dissolve; then strain water through cheesecloth and pour over the stained part. As soon as the stain has bleached out, wash the spot in cold water. Be sure to rinse all the lime out.

Books seldom used are liable to be attacked by insects. To prevent this, make a mixture of powdered alum and white peper and sift among books.

To keep glass polished: A little vinegar or laundry blue added to the rinsing water once or twice a week will impart a bright appearance.

To prevent mats from slipping: Seam on each corner of your mat a small triangular piece of velveteen. This is an excellent guard against accidents on any polished floor.

On wash day: Tepid water containing a little soda is better than cold water for steeping white articles, as it loosens more dirt and grease and saves labor and soap when washing.

To keep vacuum flasks fresh: A lump of sugar kept in a vacuum flask or a silver teapot will absorb any moisture and so keep it fresh and free from any mustiness.

Dry fruit cake will become moist if placed in the bread box with fresh bread. A cut lemon or apple will hasten the action.

To prevent a roast from becoming dry when warming it up, cover with several layers of paper, wrung out of water. Repeat when paper becomes dry.

Next week you will be baking the delicacies for Easter and if you want them to be JUST RIGHT use

Special Flour Use In Cakes Is Urged

Many a one egg cake has that "one egg" taste because it is made with ordinary flour instead of cake flour. Cake flour is made from a special soft winter wheat and milled to many times the fineness of all-purpose flour, so that the cake rises evenly, perfectly and has that fine, velvety texture which, with ordinary flour, can only be attained by the use of more eggs and more shortening. Try this economy cake.

2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons combination baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons butter or other shortening
1 cup sugar
1 egg unbeaten
¾ cup milk
½ teaspon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually and cream together until light and fluffy. Add egg and beat well. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time. Beat after each addition until smooth. Add flavoring. Bake in two greased 9-inch layer pans in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 25 minutes. Put layers together and cover top and sides of cake with your favorite frosting.

Avocado Salad Is Persuasive Dish for Lent

Ornamental Rings Form Basis, Giving Food 'Dressed-Up' Air.

THE talent which avocados exhibit for the dual role of garnish and persuasive ingredient of various dishes is never more in evidence than in such a salad as Lenten Ring Mold. Here the ornamental rings from the base of the salad, giving it a dressed-up air while remaining the last word in melting flavor when combined with the well seasoned crab and celery contents of the rings. The cut surfaces of the avocado should be separately seasoned with lemon juice and salt.

Avocado rings may be used as the base for various salads of favorite combinations, with adjustment of the type of dressing to the fruit, vegetable, sea food, or meat contents of the rings.

The ends of the fruit which are not utilized in Lenten ring salad may be used to increase the bulk of the salad or be reserved for fruit cup for the next meal. Wrap in waxed paper and store in the warmest part of refrigerator for good keeping.

Though this salad bears the name Lenten, you will find the avocado rings with fruit, meat, vegetable, or sea food combinations every bit as popular after the fast season is over.

Lenten Ring Salad.

2 avocados, cut crosswise into rings
Lemon juice
Salt
12 pimiento rings
2 cups thin celery slices
1 cup flaked crab meat
Lettuce for garnish
½ cup mayonnaise
¾ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Dash of tabasco sauce
Paprika

Prepare avocado rings by cutting crosswise against the seed of the unpeeled fruit, after removing solid ends of fruit to allow easy removal of rings. Peel each ring after removal and sprinkle with lemon juice and salt. Cut pimientos into rings of equal width. Place one avocado ring and two pimiento rings on garnished salad plate in triplicate arrangement. Combine celery, crab meat, mayonnaise, salt, lemon juice, and tabasco sauce, and fill pimiento and avocado rings. Sprinkle with paprika and serve well chilled.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

MOST RULES about the hanging of pictures are made to be broken, and the best effects are obtained by exprimenting. That is the only way to determine what light is best for a picture, and it is a good idea to test the position by both daylight and by artificial light and from various angles of vision in the room. Try to place your best pictures in a good light with relation to the part of the room that is most sat in, as it is from here that they will be most observed and enjoyed. And next endeavor to place in advantageous light when first viewed on entering the room. Nothing is more unflattering to a room than pictures that the light strikes in such a way as to make them glare with hilations from the main parts of the room.

The job of hanging pictures and changing them around is one of our favorite recreations; in fact, our family makes quite a fete of the occasion, one of us presiding on the stepladder, the others standing back kibitzing. But it happens to be a job that takes at least two people to do since it's such a nuisance to get a picture just the right height and just exactly straight.

Continental Recipe Improves Spinach

Flour, Butter and Bouillon Cube Make It Tasty.

IF AMERICAN children are eating their spinach with any relish at all it is probably because a syndicated comic strip character put it over and not because solicitous mothers have made this valuable food appetizing or attractive. Continental mothers of growing children have long known how to make spinach a delectable dish instead of the watery wad of green leaves that comes to most of our tables. For infants, of course, strained spinach is the rule on the other side of the Atlantic, as well as on this.

Try this continental version of spinach the next time. Wash the spinach thoroughly, then cut the leaves from the stems, discarding the latter. Steam fifteen minutes, using only the water that adheres to the leaves from the washings. Add a level tablespoon of salt for two pounds of spinach.

Drain off the water and chop fine, preferably with a chopping knife and bowl so that none of the juices will be lost.

Brown two level tablespoons of flour in a heaping tablespoon of butter, using an iron skillet or heavy pot. When the flour is a dark spicy brown, add a bouillon cube dissolved in half cup of hot water, stirring constantly to prevent lumping. When the mixture reaches a custardy consistency stir in the chopped spinach and a quarter teaspoon of grated nutmeg. Garnish with slices of hard cooked egg.

Spring Calls Frozen Desserts Back to Menus

Frozen desserts return to a prominent place on the menu as soon as the first chill of winter wears off. Your mechanical refrigerator or old-fashioned freezer will be kept unusually busy this season, because frozen mixtures are as popular throughout the meal as they are for dessert.

Warm Weather Calls Forth Freezers for Dessert Change

Spring Meats May Be Greatly Enhanced If Served With Tingling Sherbets; Mint Ice Is Popular.

IT IS HIGH time that the old-fashioned freezer, or if you are not blessed with this bit of equipment, the trays of your automatic refrigerator are being put to use. For spring is upon us and giddy appetites are calling for a change of desserts, and frozen desserts will be just as popular this season as they ever were before.

If you want merely an ice cream—the usual chocolate, strawberry or vanilla—it is hardly advisable to bother making it at home for there are any number of made brands that will satisfy the appetite, and they can be purchased more inexpensively than they can be prepared at home.

It is the special creams, mousses or parfaits, that are not usually sold that you will want to make occasionally when your menu calls for a glorified dessert. And then bringing the frozen mixtures into the first or main course, the subject of ices and sherbets immediately looms up as a pleasant prospect.

Ice Served With Meat.

Many of the spring meats—roast leg of lamb, fried chicken or baked ham—will be greatly enhanced when served with a cool, tingling sherbet or ice. Ices in fruit cups or fruit juice cocktails give this time-worn first course a new and thrilling appearance and flavor.

Pineapple juice cocktail and grapefruit cup are both enhanced by a scoop of rhubard ice or strawberry sherbet. The recipe for rhubard ice will be found among the honorable mention recipes printed today. A recipe for fresh strawberry ice follows at the close of this story.

Mint ice is popular served with the roast of lamb, and if tinted a pale green, will complement a minted orange cup (orange segments, sugar and sirup and chopped mint leaves). The lemon, orange and grape sherbets are delicious with crunchy, golden brown fried chicken, or tender slices of veal cutlet. Grapefruit sherbet made with milk or pineapple ice served with baked ham enhance its appeal.

Suitable for Freezers.

The following recipes for sherbets and ices may be made in either the trays of a mechanical refrigerator or in the old-fashioned freezer with a crank and dasher. It is well to remember when freezing these water or milk mixtures in the mechanical refrigerator to follow certain rules, if a smooth, fine textured product is desired. Have the trays and the mixture cold. Turn the cold control up, if possible, for fast freezing insures a smoother, finer textured product than slow freezing. When the mixture is frozen to a slight mush, remove the trays from the refrigerator and beat the mixture, scooping it well from the bottom and sides of the pan. Beat at least once again during the freezing process. If the mixture is to stand overnight in the trays, cover well with oiled paper to prevent the formation of ice crystals on top of the mixture. The unit need not be kept turned to cold after the freezing is completed.

Grapefruit Sherbet

1 cup sugar
1 cup water
2 tall cans irradiated evaporated milk
1 No. 2 can grapefruit juice

Bring sugar and water to a boil to dissolve sugar. Cool. Add milk, then grapefruit juice. Freeze with a 1:8 salt-ice mixture. To make a firmer sherbet, add 1 teaspoon gelatin soaked in 1 tablespoon cold water to the hot sirup, stirring until completely dissolved. Yield: 3 quarts.

Grape Ice

2-3 cup sugar
1 cup grape juice
¼ cup orange juice
1½ cups water
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Boil the sugar and water together for five minutes. Cool and mix with other ingredients. Strain and freeze. If crank freezer is used, freeze with 1:8 salt-ice mixture.

Strawberry Ice

1 quart box strawberries
1 cup sugar
1 cup water
Lemon juice

Wash and hull berries, sprinkle with sugar, cover and let stand two hours. Mash, squeeze through a sieve, add water and lemon juice to taste. Then freeze.

Nasturtium Leaf Salad Makes Debut in Florida

Hostesses in Coral Gables, Fla., are putting the masturtiums that bloom in their gardens to culinary use. A new salad made of the leaves of nasturtiums puts spring zest into a meal.

The tender stems of the nasturtiums are cut rather fine and mixed with cream cheese which is then made into balls. Alternate slices of canned pineapple and avocado pear are laid in a ring on a bed of nasturtium leaves and the cheese balls are piled on top. The salad is served with a French dressing made with Florida limes instead of vinegar.

Eggs Come Into Own During Easter Week

Eggs play such a prominent role during Easter week, that they have been chosen as the subject which will bring this series of Post recipe contests to a close.

Your favorite egg dish may win a prize this week that will carry your recipe into the final judging to determine the winners of the four grand prizes. Simply submit your recipe to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post, and be sure to mail it in time to reach this office not later than next Saturday morning for the recipes are judged at this time.

The six best egg recipes submitted in the contest next week will each win a prize of $1. These prize-winning recipes then will be added to the winners in the past five contests and all will be rejudged to determine who is to win the four grand prizes—first, a waffle set of chromium and black which includes an electric iron, tray, batter bowl and ladle and sirup pitcher; second, a streamlined electric iron with heat control for every type of fabric; third, an electric casserole which may be used for warming as well as cooking, and fourth, an electric kitchen clock for the smart, up-to-date kitchen.

New Recipes Given For Hors D'Oeuvres

Open House, Skipper and Cheese Crunchies Good.

Try these ideas for your hors d'oeuvre board:

This spread is called open house. Blend three ounces of Roquefort cheese and three ounces of cream cheese, softening with one tablespoon of cream. Combine with one-fourth cup of pistachio nuts, 1 teaspoon minced onion, and 2 tablespoons chopped ripe olives. Serve chilled with toasted rye wafers.

To prepare cheese crunchies, spread rusks with Roquefort cheese, top with a strip of bacon, and toast under the broiler until the cheese melts and the bacon is crisp. Serve while hot.

To make skippers, halve three-inch sweet gherkins lengthwise. Slice the underside of the pickle flat, so that the boat will stand. Make a sail from two layers of chipped dried beef put together with a thin layer of softened Roquefort cheese, thrust through a colored woodpin and stick in the top of the pickle boat.

Bedspread and Dresser Scarf Easy to Crotchet and Match

Pattern 5560—By Alice Brooks.

"COMPANY'S COMING!"—so out with the best bedspread, the dresser's matching scarf, both crocheted this easy way. You'll have reason indeed, to be proud of this lacy pair, to say nothing of a tea or dinner cloth, buffet or vanity set, all of which grow little by little as you crochet a simple medallion in humble string. Repeated and joined they make stunning "heirlooms."

In Pattern 5560 you will find complete instructions for making the square shown; an illustration of it and of all the stitches needed; material requirements.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Department, 259 West Fourteenth street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

Creamed Onions Food That Thrills

Creamed onions! The spirit of spring is calling! And who could fail to reply—especially when this recipe makes the answer so easy, so pleasing. Choose your onions carefully, though. Buy the pearly, small ones. Cook them just until tender and no more. Then when you add the delicious, creamy irradiated evaporated milk white sauce, you'll have food that thrills, especially if you serve the onions with roast lamb or baked ham. Here is the recipe:

Creamed Onions.

1½ pints small white onions
1½ tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
Few grains pepper
1 cup boiling water
1 cup irradiated evaporated milk.

Remove outer dry skin of onions carefully. Cook in two quarts boiling, salted water in an open kettle until tender, but still retaining shape. Drain thoroughly, turn into hot serving dish and add white sauce made of the remaining ingredients. Yield: five servings.

Hungarian Veal Chops, 'Dalken' Are Delicious

VISITING celebrities are always dropping in on the menage of Eugene Ormandy, famous young conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, recently appointed joint conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Leopold Stokowski, and well known to Washington audiences. He has a Viennese wife, and the combination of Hungarian and Austrian spells good food and "gemuetlichkeit," which in English means hominess and good cheer. At the Ormandy home, at their frequent informal dinners, they are bound to serve veal chops with paprika sauce, which is very Hungarian, and for dessert, Austrian cakes called "Dalken." These are not only delicious, but are very easy to prepare in your own kitchen:

Veal Chops With Paprika Sauce.

Ingredients: Veal cutlets, 2 slices of bacon to each cutlet, one cup of sour cream, 1 tablespoon of paprika, salt.

Method: Fry the bacon and when done, remove from the pan and keep warm in a very slow oven. Fry the cutlets to a nice golden color in the bacon fat, add a little hot water and simmer till the cutlets are quite tender, seasoning with salt and paprika. Add the cream gradually, stirring until the sauce thickens. To serve, put some boiled rice in the center of a dish and lay the slices of bacon over it. Arrange the cutlets around the dish and pour sauce over them. (The sour cream, adds a most unusual, piquant flavor to the dish.)

Austrian Dalken.

Ingredients: 1½ cups of flour, 4 eggs, 2 tablespoons of powdered sugar, 1½ cups of milk, a pinch of salt, butter.

Method: Work all the ingredients thoroughly together in a bowl with a wonder spoon, and add the milk gradually. Let it stand for 15 minutes. Butter small molds usually used for poaching eggs, and put two tablespoons of the mixture in each. (Do not put any water in the pan containing the molds.) Place in a moderate oven. The batter rises, and as it does so, the edges curve inward towards the center, owing to the rounded sides of these particular molds, thus forming little tartlets. When the under part is browned and the tartlet is well shaped, turn and slightly brown the upper part. When done, they are filled with apricot, greengage or plum jam—or whipped cream may be used as in cream puffs.

Orange Cookies Are Made Easy

IF you have ever been in a hurry to make refrigerator cookies, then you may like to try this suggestion.

Refrigerator cookies, you know, are at their best when they have remained overnight in your refrigerator. Sometimes it is inconvenient to wait until the next day before using the dough.

In this instance, mix the dough as usual. Take a freezing tray from the mechanical refrigerator and remove the ice divider. Put the dough in the tray and press the ice cube divider into the dough. Insert the tray in the ice chamber compartment for 15 or 20 minutes. Upon removing the tray, push the dough out formed in perfect squares.

Shaped like an ice cube, slice three slices from each square and bake as usual. This is a very easy way to handle and this method makes dainty cookies for any occasion.

Orange Refrigerator Cookies.

1 cup shortening
½ cup brown sugar
½ cup white sugar
1 egg
2 tablespoons orange juice
2¾ cups flour
½ teaspoon soda
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
½ cup blanched almonds.

Cream the shortening and sugar together. Add the well-beaten egg. Sift the flour well before measuring, reserving ½ cup. Sift together the remaining flour, salt and soda and gradually add to the creamed mixture with the orange juice and the rind. Add the almonds cut in strips and sprinkle with ½ cup flour. Roll in a long roll about 3 inches in diameter. Wrap in wax paper and chill in the refrigerator. Slice off and bake on a greased baking sheet in a hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit) 8 to 12 minutes. Makes 6 dozen.

These cookies may be baked by the quick method, also.

G. O. P. Heads Convene Today To Plan Action

Primary Results Leave Borah's Program Unchanged.

Republican leaders of five States and the District Columbia will gather here today for the second of a series of regional conferences being conducted by the Republican National Committee.

Working out a co-ordinated plan of party activity was given as the goal of the meetings by National Chariman Henry P. Fletcher. The first meeting was held in Chicago last month and the third is scheduled for April 7, in Boston.

Among those to attend, Chairman Fletcher said last night, are the following national committeemen:

Daniel E. Pomeroy, of New Jersey; Charles D. Hilles, of New York; Former Senator David A. Reed and Mrs. Worthington Scranton, of Pennsylvania; O. E. Weller and Mrs. Calvin Gabriel, of Maltimore; C. D. Buck, of Delaware, and E. F. Colladay and Mrs. Virginia W. Speel, of Washington.

State chairmen and vice chairmen who will attend include Henry W. Jeffers and Mrs. Pearl R. Bridegum, of New Jersey; Melvin C. Eaton and Mrs. Robert L. Bacon, of New York; M. Harvey Taylor and Miss S. M. R. O'Hara, of Pennsylvania; William P. Lawson and Walter R. Rudy, of Maryland; Col. Edmund Mitchell, of Delaware, and Leo A. Rover, of the District of Columbia.

Meanwhile, Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, said that the result of Thursday's New York State primary, in which he failed to win any of the national convention delegates, "doesn't change my plans in any respect."

"I am leaving for Milwaukee tomorrow afternoon to keep my speaking date there Monday," he declared.

Carl C. Bachmann, chairman of the Borah headquarters, declared that the Illinois voting on April 14 "will tell a different story." There Borah is contesting with Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, for the State delegation.

Iowa Backs Roosevelt.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 3 (AP).—Iowa Democrats in a pro-New Deal convention here today reaffirmed faith in President Roosevelt, rapped the American Liberty League, and pledged the President the State's 22 national convention votes.

A resolution adopted with cheers, in what party leaders hailed as the "greatest convention ever held by Iowa Democrats," directed that the Philadelphia convention delegation which it elected cast its votes, as a unit, for renomination of the President.

The convention-approved resolutions, expressed "gratitude of the people of Iowa for the endless benefits we have received" under Roosevelt's "matchless leadership."

An expected boom for selection of Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace as a delegate-at-large failed to materialize when the convention elected eight delegates approved by Goy. Clyde L. Herring. Wallace's name was not on the slate and no other names were placed in nomination.

Herring and his rival for the Democratic senatorial nomination, Congressman Hurbert Utterback, both won places on the delegate list selected by the Sixth Congressional District caucus and were approved as district delegates to the national convention.

Borah Defeat Hailed.

Albany, N. Y., April 3 (AP).—New York's regular Republican organization, unpledged to any Presidential candidate, hailed tonight a victory over Borah-pledged candidates in yesterday's primary fight for seats to the national convention.

Nearly complete returns from the 9 of the 43 Congressional districts in which the supporters of Senator Borah, of Idaho, entered candidates showed the "Old Guard" forces averaged a 3-to-1 margin of triumph. The Borah organization did not contest the regulars in the other 34 districts.

The regulars' victory carried out predictions made by State Chairman Melvin C. Eaton that the Republican Party in the Empire State would send an uninstructed delegation to the June convention in Cleveland. He was in Washington today.

While the Republican "Old Guard" won overwhelmingly in its convention delegate squabble, the Socialist regulars headed by Louis Waldman apparently bowed to the "left coalition" led by Norman Thomas, twice his party's candidate for President. It was the first Socialist contest since 1919.

Returns from the Socialist contests dribbled in slowly, but there were sufficient results on hand to indicate a high percentage of convention seats and State committee members for Thomas.

There were a few local factional contests in the Democratic primary, but President Roosevelt's renomination was not an issue.

In Erie County, where the principal interest centered, Democrats voted 2 to 1 for new leaders as the first step in the rebuilding of the once-powerful county Democratic organization, two factions had been contending for the recognition of State Chairman James A. Farley.

The Borah organization leaders in New York State, Representative Hamilton Fish, and William Ziegler, jr., former Republican State committee treasurer, ran far behind the regular organization in the Fifteenth Congressional District, where the organization staked its main hopes.

Another ardent Borah backer, former Republican State Chairman W. Kingsland Macy, also received a setback when his candidates lost in the First District on Long Island by a margin of 3 to 1. Macy, himself, lost by a smilar margin to an "Old Guard" candidate for alternate.

A sidelight of the upstate contests came in the Thirty-sixth Congressional District in the Finger Lakes section, where the chief agitators in the Borah movement were the old-age pension advocates. They were smothered by nearly 4 to 1 by the organization led by Representative John Taber.

Wesleyan Head Scouts Danger Of School Reds

Tells Alumni Club Here American Colleges Do Good Job.

Speaking at the annual Wesleyan Alumni Club dinner at the University Club last night, Dr. James L. McConaughy, Wesleyan University president, said he "could think of few things more unfortunate" than forbidding students "to discuss world problems or to isolate them from the world about them."

"I am convinced that the American college is training the best kind of citizenship for the future" said Dr. McConaughy. "I do not believe that American college students are in any sense 'Red.'"

"If students today are disturbed at the situation in which they find the world, this does not signify that they are 'Red,' nor does it justify us of the older generation, who are to some degree responsible for world conditions, in denouncing them," added the Wesleyan president.

Dr. McConaughy discussed work the psychological department at Wesleyan had done in aiding students having difficulty with their study habits and told of impressions he had gained from a ten-week observation of English university methods.

He said he returned from England more convinced than before that American institutions were doing exceptionally good work. American curricula, he stated, are generally superior to the English in economics and science, but are surpassed by the British in the classics and in preparing men for Government leadership.

"We teach better than they do," he said, "but they give superior students a splendid opportunity to educate themselves."

Spring Styles Preview Is Held At Mayflower

Up and down the long lobby were booths devoted to the display of costume accessories—hats, shoes, scarfs, bags and gloves. In glass show windows were glittering jewels, bracelets, necklaces, earrings, clips, rings and brooches. In alcoves around a fountain banked with ferns and flowers, onlookers were attracted to the exhibits of luggage, pictures, glassware and housefurnishings.

The climax of the show occurred when, to the soft strains of Sidney's orchestra, mannequins one by one paraded around the circular stage occupying the center of the large ballroom. Bedecked in spring splendor from the Connecticut avenue shops, they were the target of thousands of eager eyes watching to see what's what in this season's styles.

Spring Suits, Daytime Dresses.

Spring suits and daytime dresses first were modeled. Suits suggesting the Gibson girl silhouette with broad shoulders, full sleeves and wasp waists. Dresses that carried one back to grandmother's day with taffeta petticoats rustling beneath pleated skirts and peplums accentuating hips.

Hats were laden with flowers, topped with large bows and shiny quills. Some had large brims measuring 4 to 5 inches. Others were small toques, mannish fedoras or pancake berets showing everything from a Mandarin to a Margot influence.

Bursts of applause heralded the evening gowns with long, trailing skirts, perky jackets and long, flowing chiffon coats and capes.

Conspicuous throughout the show were the number of colors used to enliven these spring costumes. Colors unexpectedly and cleverly combined.

This trend toward color and more color was carried even to coiffures. One model, wearing a deep lilac gown, had her blonde hair tinted to match. Others foregoing colorful coiffures showed how striking were rows of curls encircling the head like a crown, or clustering over the forehead in frivolous bangs.

Fashion facts gathered from the style parade include: (1) Skirts are slightly shorter and fuller. (2) Shoulders are stressed. (3) Peplums are back again. (4) Tunics are especialy favored for both daytime and evening costumes. (5) Shoes are more decorative and feminine than ever. (6) Gloves and bags are matched. (7) Ribbons and flower trims are used in profusion.

Skirts Slightly Shorter.

Clark Assails Measure; Issue Yet Unsettled After Action.

By the Associated Press.

Asserting the issue was "between private ownership and Government ownership" of the merchant marine, the Senate Commerce Committee—its membership divided—yesterday reported out a ship subsidy bill intended to replace existing ocean mail contracts.

Both "majority" and "minority" reports were issued, and as half of the committee members signed the minority report, Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri, branded the "majority" report a "palpable misnomer."

The issue lay between two bills, one introduced by Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, committee chairman, and the other by Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania.

The Copeland bill indorsed by the "majority" report would grant ship owners as much as 50 per cent construction subsidy and an operating subsidy sufficient to meet lower foreign costs. In addition, it would allow owners to borrow from the Government up to 75 per cent of their share of the cost.

The Guffey bill would limit the construction subsidy to 33 1-3 per cent, with other terms to some degree similar to the Copeland bill, but would permit the Government to step in and build and operate the ships in event private capital could not be interested.

The "majority report," signed by Copeland, attacked the Guffey bill with the assertion it imposed conditions upon private ownership which "could not be fulfilled."

"The choice is between private ownership and operation with limited Government aid, and Government ownership and operation, with unlimited expenditure," Copeland's report said.

The "minority report," signed by Clark, Guffey and others, made no mention of the Pennsylvanian's bill but declared the Copeland bill "would not result in the creation of a naval auxiliary of any consequence" as was intended but would "place a premium upon inflation of shipbuilding costs in this country without any corresponding advantage to American labor."

The rival reports left the subsidy question no nearer settled than a few days ago when Clark declared he would "fight to death" the Copeland bill and would accept the Gucey bill only because it was the "lesser of two evils." He has flatly opposed a subsidy of any kind.

House Passes 4-Department Budget Funds

By the Associated Press.

The House put through in three hours yesterday a $115,012,900 bill for running the State, Justice, Commerce and Labor departments next year, after adding $545,500 for amendments.

The measure was approved without a record vote, after the increases—including $528,000 for the Department of Commerce under supplemental budget estimates sent up by President Roosevelt following completion of the original bill in committee—went in without protest.

Involved was $150,000 more for air regulation, an additional $175,000 for extension of airways, development and experimental work, and $200,000 for publication of the 1935 agricultural census.

Another amendment added $52,000 for enforcement of the Bacon-Davis act requiring contractors on Government buildings to observe prescribed labor standards, and $3,000 for building a shad hatchery somewhere on the South Atlantic Coast.

The House beat down attempts by Representative Bacon (Republican), New York, to cut a $748,000 allotment for the Bureau of Labor statistics by $48,000, and by Representative Griswold (Democrat), Indiana, to boost it to $884,600 budget figure. Bacon said it was "the most extravagant agency in the Government," but others defended it as the only accurate source of information on national income, employment and other computations.

Lure of U. S. Parks Shown at Lecture

Underground restaurants, spectacular outdoor pageants, desert speedways, singing waitresses, horseback riding, natural flower gardens and zoos—these are some of the attractions now offered by the 25 national parks and 68 national monuments scattered throughout the country, but principally in the West, according to Dr. H. C. Bryant, assistant director of the National Park Service.

In an illustrated lecture before the National Geographic Society in Constitution Hall last night, Dr. Bryant showed motion pictures of tourists being served in the big underground cafeteria of the Carlsbad Caverns, which were virtually unknown, he pointed out, until a National Geographic Society expedition explored and photographed them a little over 10 years ago.

Other movies depicted the thrilling "fire fall" at Yosemite National Park, the climax of an outdoor pageant given each evening during the summer months, and automobiles racing over the gleaming gypsum dunes of the new White Sands National Monument in New Mexico.

To illustrate the diversity of our national playgrounds, Dr. Bryant showed "square dances" and ox carts in the Great Smokies; anemone sea caves in the Acadia National Park in Maine, geysers in the Yellowston e,giant, age-old trees in California; prehistoric cliff-dwellings in Mesa Verde, Revolutionary War fortifications at Morristown, N. J., and at Yorktown, Va., and the weird desert life of Death Valley, California.

School Fund Restoration Held Likely

$87,000 for Character Education Due to Be Placed in Budget.

Dr. Charters Denies He Is a Red; 'Not Even Pink,' He Says.

Restoration of $87,000 for character education in the Washington public schools in the 1937 District supply bill appeared assured yesterday after the Senate sub-committee on appropriations listened to pleas from school officials.

Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio State University, whom Representative Blanton, author of the antired rider, labeled a Communist, told the sub-committee he is not a Communist and not even a pink. He is a Republican, he added.

The House sub-committee, in striking out the appropriation for character education, placed much of the blame on Charters, who has been engaged as consultant in the experiment.

Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, supported Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, president of the Board of Education, and Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, in their request that the funds be restored.

Civic Workers Heard.

The sub-committee, holding an all-day session, heard a score of civic spokesmen plead for a larger emergency relief appropriation, additional school items and restoration of Health Department funds to the estimates submitted by the District Commissioners to the Budget Bureau.

Chairman Thomas said that hearings will be continued this morning and may run into the early part of next week.

Walter S. Ufford, of the Washington Council of Social Agencies, headed a delegation of social welfare spokesmen, who told the sub-committee that the $1,506,020 carried in the House bill for relief would be inadequate to care for even the unemployables now receiving aid.

He was accompanied by J. Hillman Hollister, Ray Everett, and Mrs. Louisa Roberts.

Mrs. Walter Ufford, of the Monday Evening Club, asked for a hospital unit for the Home for the Feeble Minded at Laurel. She said there are 20 active cases of tuberculosis and 40 inactive cases at the institution.

More Teachers Asked.

An increase in the number of public school teachers and a fund of $6,000 to allow for automatic promotions were requested by Miss Selma Barchardt, of the Teachers' Union.

Mrs. E. Morgan Pryse, of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, made a plea for restoration of the $3,000,000 cut by the House from the lump sum payment and increased appropriations for public health and education.

Additional school teachers and a bus for crippled children were asked by a delegation headed by Mrs. J. N. Saunders, chairman of the District Legislation Council, which comprises 20 civic organizations.

The delegation included representatives of the Parent-Teacher Congress, the District Federation of Women's Clubs, the Voteless League of Women Voters, the American Association of Social Welfare, the Council of Social Agencies, and the Council of Jewish Women.

Mrs. Ernest Howard, jr., of the Federation of Women's Clubs, asked 116 additional policemen and 33 more firemen.

Louise Lowe of the Board of Trade said 33 more firemen are necessary if the District firemen are to share the 26-day vacation granted all Government employes this year.

School Site Sought.

The sub-committee was urged to provide funds for the purchase of sites for a new school and a recreation center in the area covered by the Hillcrest Citizens Association by R. C. Darnell, of the association. He said that available land is being taken up rapidly for commercial and residential building.

Dorsey W. Hyde, jr., headed a delegation for civic organizations in the western part of the city. He asked restoration of the fund for night school operation to the figure submitted by the District Commissioners and an additional $10,000 for a night school at Western High School.

Lieut. Col. Orvel Johnson, director general of the Reserve Officers Training Corps of the United States, submitted a statement attacking allegedly communistic teaching in the schools and urged retention of the Blanton anti-red rider.

Dr. D. E. Buckingham, District veterinarian, whose job is due to expire July 1, urged the sub-committee to make provision for its continuance on a part-time basis. He asserted that the District has 5,000 animals to care for and that he can prove that the job will more than pay for itself in production.

Dr. Buckingham was appointed to his job last fall upon the personal request of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

Jordan to Die In Chair June 19 For Slaying

'Bus Boy' Killer Tells His Attorney 'Not to Worry' After Hearing Decree.

Thomas Jordan—thin, pallid-faced "bus boy" slayer of Mrs. Lizzie Jaynes, cashier of the Garden T. Shoppe—will be electrocuted in the District Jail June 19, Justice F. Dickinson Letts decreed in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

His face immobile, Jordan stood quietly while the solemn, death-dealing sentence was intoned. After it was over and he was being hustled away by guards, he grinned at his attorney and said: "Don't worry about it." With that he was placed under strict surveillance, from which he may emerge only to be escorted to the chair.

The sentence was pronounced just five years and one day after Jordan, in company with another man and a woman, entered the Garden T. Shoppe, on Columbia road, scooped up approximately $100 from the cash register, and in panicky desperation fired one shot to frustrate pursuit.

That one shot struck Mrs. Jaynes, a portly, middle-aged woman, in the abdomen, causing a wound from which she died several days later. Police hinted the shot was fired by a novice because there was no reason to shoot to kill, the money having been taken and the three robbers being on their way out of the store.

Jordan's conviction came after he wrote a letter to United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett several months ago inquiring if he could safely return to this city. He had been previously questioned in the robbery and released and, he explained, he thought of getting married and he wished to bring no censure down on the head of his wife-to-be. A subsequent investigation brought about his confession.

Only Jordan has been arrested. The others are fugitives. He was prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb.

Safety Hurts

When Child Causes Bus Device to Operate.

A safety device on a Capital Transit bus worked perfectly yesterday—too well, in fact—for when it was suddenly applied by a mischievous child three women passengers were slightly hurt.

Driver R. R. Showalter, of 415 Eleventh street southeast, turned the bus from its route to Gallinger Hospital where the women were treated.

The passengers were shaken up when the bus, bound for Randle Highlands, came to a sudden stop at Seventeenth and A streets southeast, when a rear door opened slightly. This caused the brakes to be automatically applied.

In a report to his superiors, Showalter said he suspected a small child playing near the bus pushed an object between the double doors.

Those treated were Mrs. Anne Harding, 38, of 1246 Ninth street northwest; Miss Ernestine Tomer, 26, of 116 Adams street, and Miss Jacquelyn Miller, 26, 1729 East Capitol street.

Clown Class Here Prepares For 2d Annual Child Circus

Mysteries of Make-Up Explained by Instructor Frank Portillo to 30 at Paul Junior High; 1,200 to Participate in Fete May 23.

What's a circus without a clown? Like a car with the engine missing, says Frank Portillo, who is preparing Washington high school boys to perform in the second annual Child Festival Circus on May 23.

At the second meeting of the clown class at Paul Junior High yesterday afternoon he explained the mysteries of make-up to an audience of 30 young would-be clowns, and demonstrated on Sterling Huntley how to change the whole expression of a face.

Three quick movements of his black stick, and Sterling resembled the perfect Mephistopheles, looking out from under an old stovepipe hat for new worlds to conquer.

"You've got to take boys who have a certain knack to make clowns," Portillo said, "but I've been lucky so far in finding a lot of good material in these classes."

There are other difficulties to be overcome, however, as was pointed out by Arthur Flynn, 12, and Jack White, 14, some of the "good material," who were unfortunately kept late after school last week and couldn't attend the class.

The class, sponsored by the Community Center, will be held every Friday afternoon at Paul Junior High School auditorium, but boys from other schools are attending the classes.

More than 1,200 boys and girls will take part in the circus next month which will be held in the Central High School Stadium, and the audience will probably number at least 10,000, judging from last year's attendance.

30 Days Limit Set for Retail Liquor Credit

Liquor retailers are to be required to pay their accounts within 30 days in the future, George W. Offutt, jr., chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, announced yesterday.

Announcement of the new policy of the board followed a hearing at which board members sought to get from Manuel Davis, attorney for the exclusive Retail Liquor Dealers Association, and from Jerome McKee, former president, substantiation of their charges at a recent hearing before the Commissioners that wholesalers were "carrying" many retailers by extending undue credit.

The hearing developed some warmth when McKee began questioning on his own account. He wanted to know just how the board had gone over the wholesalers' books. How would the board go about investigating evidence there were close "tie-ups" between wholesalers and retailers if the evidence were given the board, he asked. He had co-operated fully with the board in the past but he had had enough of it, he inferred.

He was there to answer, not to ask questions, and is an officer of a corporation licensed by the board and the board would expect continued co-operation in the future, he was told.

Both Davis and McKee told the board the "carrying" charges were based on statements made by Milford Schwartz, attorney for the Wholesale Liquor Dealers, Inc., and not by them. The board announced it would call Schwartz.

1,500 Parking Warrants Are Declared Void

Approximately 1,500 warrants charging violation of the snow-removal parking ban were declared void by Vernon West, acting corporation counsel, yesterday.

The warrants were issued during January and February for violation of signs placed on busy streets in order to facilitate snow removal. Violations carry fines ranging from two to five dollars. Persons who have already forfeited collateral will not be reimbursed.

Walsh Decries Recognition of Soviet Russia

Soviet Russia obtained American recognition by persuading "the gullible," the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., Georgetown University vice president, told a lecture audience last night.

He charged those in control of the Soviet government always act "ruthlessly" to attain their ends through deception.

"The Third Internationale," Walsh said, "was allowed to subside during the years when Mr. Litvinov was angling for the biggest fish in the diplomatic pond—recognition by the United States.

Convened in Moscow.

"Articles were written, books published and interviews granted to persuade the gullible that the world revolution had been abandoned.

"When the prize was landed, however, the Third Internationale was promptly revived, a new and enthusiastic world congress convened in Moscow last July and a special program elaborated to advance revolution in the United States.

"One recognizes the master's voice in the renowned activities of Communists in every walk today, on the air, in industry, on the stage, in colleges and universites and even before committees of Congress."

Walsh contended the Soviet regime was simulating liberalism by the recently announced policy of permitting the children of kulaks (land-owning peasants) to attend schools.

"The pattern," he added, "is working out perfectly in the publicized freedom now being extended to those of bourgeois origin in Russia.

Clever, Transparent.

"But experienced observers will look beyond the appearances for the true reality. This time the danger comes from Soviet Russia's eastern frontier. Japan is threatening Russia by way of Mongolia and Manchukuo.

"A serious situation has again risen. Consequently, a button is pushed in the Kremlin and information begins to appear, for foreign consumption, emphasizing the liberalized tendencies and stressing the internal strength of the government which now makes such generosity advisable.

"Simultaneously, an alliance is concluded with France, whom Soviet statesmen have stigmatized as the head and front of anti-Soviet activities in Europe and the Communist Party in America bestirs itself to co-ordinated defense and eulogy of their true fatherland: Clever, but transparent and stereotyped."

'Insult' Charged, Future War Veterans' Parade Plea Denied

Washington's "Veterans of Future Wars," organized two weeks ago to insure payment of the bonus for the next war in time for the beneficiaries to spend the money before going off to war, will not march in the Army Day parade on Monday, Maj. Edward S. Bettelheim, jr., in charge of the parade arrangements, announced yesterday.

Refusal of the request of the Future Veterans "to march alongside other veteran groups" was based Maj. Bettelheim said, principally upon the "insult to American motherhood inferred in the organization of a girls' auxiliary to be known as the Gold Star Mothers."

The fact that the veterans have since renamed the girls' unit the Home Fire Division, did not "make up for the insult," Maj. Bettelheim said.

"If you slap a woman's face, the harm is done," he said, "It won't just do to say you're sorry. My mother is far too sacred to me to have her kidded by an organization."

In reply to Maj. Bettelheim's request for more information about the Future Veterans, John I. Loving, a student at Georgetown University and commander of the District veterans group, wrote:

"It is my earnest desire to impress you with the seriousness of our purpose. The Veterans of Future Wars is an organization made up of young American citizens who possess the ideals upon which the America of the future will rest. We submit that the time to honor the Nation's heroes is now and not when the horrors of war have obliterated their existence on earth."

Aid Shut Off, 164 Families Seek Charity

Private Agencies Find Cases Desperate, but Cannot Help.

Some Assigned to WPA Jobs Won't Get Pay Until April 18.

Cut off from public relief on April 1, 164 families of employables have sought aid from the various agencies affiliated with the Community Chest, a capitulation showed yesterday.

Their pleas for funds with which to buy food, fuel, clothing and medicine were in vain. They had sought out the private agencies after pleading with welfare workers in the public assistance offices in the hope some exception might be made in their cases from summary shutting off of relief because of reduced appropriations.

Abnormal Demands.

"There is nothing that the Community Chest agencies can do," it was said. "To take on even one additional family would mean pushing off their rolls another family, equally worthy and equally in need of funds.

"Careful investigation shows that every one of these applicants is in desperate straits. The Community Chest family agencies, budgeted for normal relief needs, but not prepared for such abnormal demands, have no funds with which to meet this emergency and the situation promises to get worse."

Appeals were made to several private agencies. The Family Service Association received 49 applications; Catholic Charities, 23; Jewish Social Service, 15; American Legion Welfare Department, 21; the Salvation Army, 26. Nineteen sought aid from the Bureau of Rehabilitation and 17 from the Travelers Aid Society.

4 to 10 in Families.

The applicants represents families of from 4 to 10 persons. Some were men who have been assigned to WPA jobs. They will not get their first pay checks until April 18. They received their last relief checks on March 16.

"Others have not even this hope of funds in sight," a Chest official said. "Many are without food. Others are about to be evicted from their homes. We are helpless to aid them."

Miss M. Alice Hill, head of the public assistance division, met with her lieutenants yesterday to canvass the entire situation once again. Border-line cases, rules governing eligibility for old age grants, aid for the needy blind and for dependent children were discussed.

Gasless Buggy

Wanted for Cowboy Ball of Arizona Society.

Paul Roca, secretary of the Arizona State Society, envies Cinderella. Her fairy godmother whacked a pumpkin and, presto, up popped a fine carriage and white horses to draw it.

Roca's plight is as follows: He wants to rent a wagon, preferably an old-fashioned buckboard, and a horse or two to take four or five couples to the State society's spring round-up dance at the Continental Hotel tonight. But he can find no one who has such an item to rent.

Since the dancers are all supposed to come costumed as cowpunchers, be-chapped cowgirls and that sort of thing, Roca thinks it would be much more appropriate to arrive in a buckboard or stage coach drawn by a team of fiery steeds than to pull up in a gasoline buggy.

So if you have a horse and coach stowed away in the attic, Roca will be pleased if you let him know about it. His telephone number is National 3120, branch 882.

He was chancellor of the archdiocese of Philadelphia and director of charities for the archdiocese. He is now a judge in the Philadelphia archdiocese matrimonial court, a moderator of the priests' conference, a member of the vigilance committee, and professor of pastoral theology at the major seminary.

The Baltimore Catholic Review says of him:

School Buses For 71 Cripples To Start Again

Transportation of the 71 crippled and tubercular school children who were deprived of their customary bus service three weeks ago because of a shortage of funds, will be resumed Monday, Robert L. Haycock, superintendent in charge of elementary schools, announced yesterday.

The resumption of bus service has been made possible by the agreement of the Budget Bureau to a deficiency appropriation of $1,500, which will be sufficient to carry these children to and from school for the rest of the school term.

The additional funds, however, will not be sufficient to provide bus transportation for the 43 sight conservation pupils, who will be forced to come to school as best they can, said Haycock. Since the cutting off of their transportation, all of these children have managed to return to school, he added.

School officials originally requested a deficiency appropriation of roughly $4,000, which the Budget Bureau refused in the belief that funds for bus transportation for handicapped children would be available under the terms of the social security act. The Children's Bureau, in charge of the administration of the particular section of the act, took the stand that no such grant was permissable.

A second conference with Budget Bureau was then aranged for school officials, the Commissioners and members of the Kiwanis Club, who always have been particularly active in the work for crippled children. It was agreed to put in a request for a deficiency appropriation sufficiently large to provide transportation for those children most in need.

House Amused As Snell Balks Talk by Blanton

A few minutes before adjournment Blanton obtained the consent of Majority Leader Bankhead to address the House for three minutes.

Hastily, Blanton withdrew his unanimous consent request for time so that Snell would withdraw his point of no quorum.

The Texan, who has an unequaled reputation for stuffing the Congressional Record, then asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Again Snell objected.

So furious that persons in the gallery could see his face turn white with rage, Blanton shook his fist at the minority leader and shouted:

The House broke into an uproar of laughter as it adjourned.

Only a few weeks ago Snell crossed Blanton by coming to the defense of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, during debate on the District supply bill. Snell and Ballou were boyhood and family friends.

Huge Crowd To Witness Cherry Fete

Parks Officials Doubt Weather Will Affect Blossoms.

Trees Will Be in Full Bloom Regalia by Tomorrow.

Confident that predicted freezing weather will not injure the flowers, National Capital Parks officials yesterday completed arrangements to handle a record Japanese cherry blossom crowd in West Potomac Park tomorrow.

The famous blossoms will be 80 per cent full today and 100 per cent out tomorrow, said Edward J. Kelly, administrative assistant to Superintendent C. Marshall Finnan. Freezing weather would inflict no appreciable damage, he said, unless it persists for 24 hours or longer.

Special traffic regulations go into effect at 9 a. m. tomorrow and will continue during the blooming of the Tidal Basin blossoms. In substance, they provide for one-way, clockwise traffic around the basin and ban parking along the drive.

Local auto clubs expect a record-breaking invasion of tourists, on the strength of innumerable long distance calls from all over the East. The blossom display will last about a week.

Autos may enter the Tidal Basin drive by any of the following routes:

One-way south on Seventeenth street from Constitution avenue; Lincoln Memorial Circle via French drive; south of Fourteenth street to south of outlet bridge, then around South Basin drive across inlet bridge to Riverside and West Basin drive; roadway west from Fifteenth street in rear of Sylvan Theater, around park lodge, and thence to East Basin drive.

Outbound, motorists have their choice of Fourteenth street, north and south; Riverside drive to Lincoln Memorial and north via Bacon drive; Fifteenth street north from East Basin drive; Riverside drive south of inlet bridge, around Hains Point via Washington Channel drive and Fourteenth street; Constitution avenue, east and west.

The cinder roadway bordering West Potomac golf course will be closed at Tidal Basin road. Persons wishing to reach the links should take French drive, entering from Lincoln Memorial Circle, and leave the same way.

An innovation this season will be the stationing of a Federal park naturalist at a booth near the Tidal Basin boathouse to answer questions and distribute brochures giving the history of the Japanese cherry trees. He is Donald E. McHenry and he will be in uniform. The naturalist will be on duty from noon today until the blooming period is over.

Ballou 5-Yr. Plan On Schools Backed

Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou's recommendations for meeting the elementary school building needs of the District for the next five years were approved yesterday, without exception, by the finance committee of the Board of Education.

The recommendations will be incorporated into the proposed five-year school-building program now being drawn up. At yesterday's meeting, Dr. Ballou said he expected to be able to present a complete report on the program to the board at its next meeting April 22.

The elementary school report was based on an estimated need by 1942 of 445 additional classrooms.

Board Backs Proposal.

Approval of the District Commissioners was given yesterday to the proposal of Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, iDstrict committee chairman, to amend existing law so that claims against the District must be filed within 30 days. The present law allows six months within which to file claims. Senator King said he would introduce a bill cutting the time it approved by the Commissioners.

Baxter, Scores In Melodrama At Loew's Fox

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the book by Walter Noble Burns, adapted to the screen by William A. Wellman, Joseph Calleia and Melvin Levy, starring Warner Baxter and featuring Margo, with Ann Loring, Bruce Cabot, J. Carroll Naish, Soledad Jimenez, Eric Linden, Edgar Kennedy, Paul Hurst, Francis McDonald, Carlos de Valdez and Charles Trowbridge. Directed by William A. Wellman. Previewed Tuesday, March 31.

Although, in this vigorous rehabilitation of the murderous persecution to which the Mexican landowners of Southern California were subjected in the early gold rush days of 1848, Warner Baxter reverts to an approximation of his early character of the Cisco Kid, and wild riding and wilder shooting lend the closing sequences of the throbbing narrative a melodramatic frenzy of overwhelming proportions, the underlying theme of the picture is an appealing, sympathetic and warmly moving one.

The scene opens on a peaceful California countryside with both the residents of the master's house and certain of their retainers laying plans for weddings and their attendant fiestas. Then come the rumbles of the terror that may be expected from the invading hordes of pillaging gringos. In their uncurbed lust for gold, these scavengers from the four corners of the earth take the law into their own hands, murder at will, pillage without legal hindrance and ravage both fields and homes.

Murrieta Turns Avenger.

They come finally to the modest little farm of Joaquin Murietta, one of the more intelligent and patient of the simple tillers of the soil, and in a controversy over their right to seek gold on his property kill his young bride in cold blood. This is the turning point in the outlook and life of Murietta, the nebulous counterpart of a character who is said really to have lived in the lawless day of which the film play treats.

Murietta, adopting the methods of his arch enemies, avenges the murder of his bride by taking the lives of all those who had a part in that outrage. In the performance of this sacred duty, he inspires the admiration of Three-Fingered Jack, most notorious of the outlaws preying upon their less aggressive fellows. Together they form a sort of Vigilante Committee of desperadoes, who prey upon the rich and the oppressive to protect the property rights and means of livelihood of the country's original settlers.

From this point on, "The Robin Hood of El Dorado" ceases to be a study in the dulcet moods of a gentle pastoral idyll and takes on all of the thundering violence of a de luxe excursion into the adventurous extravagances of a primitive, pioneer West. There is thievery, rapine and murder; unbridled merry-making in the bandits' secret village in Hidden Valley; the encroachment of the law, in the form of a volunteer posse, upon the lawlessness of the times and a final pitched battle that lends the film a climax as harrowing and as blood-tingling as Custer's last stand or the epic of a lost battalion on the Western Front.

Baxter a Real Star.

Through all of this, Warner Baxter traces a vivid and sympathetic likeness of the bandit-patriot whose name he bears in the picture. His skill in this sort of thing already is known. It is all the more remarkable when consideration is given his fine work in some of the foremost of the screen's musical productions and, more recently, in the title role of "The Prisoner of Shark Island." He is supported by two leading women, one a newcomer and the other comparatively a novice in the cinema. They are, respectively, Ann Loring and Margo, appearing this week in "Winterset" at the National. While both contribute worthy performances, Margo's is by far the more notable of the two.

One of the surprises of the film is the portrayal of the outlaw, Three-Fingered Jack, by J. Carroll Naish. Mr. Naish has given flashes of ability as a character actor before, but never anything so impressive as this. His accent is a match for the star's, Soledad Jimenez, Bruce Cabot, Eric Linden, Kay Hughes, Carlos de Valdez and scores more add to the effectiveness of this rousing melodrama with a tinge of history in its background. As for the actual scenic backgrounds, they are in the picturesque high mountain country where the incidents of the story are supposed actually to have occurred. They have been photographed with rare artistry and beauty of effect.

Bernie Panics Customers.

Returning to the Capital after too long an absence, Ben Bernie and "all the lads" take possession of the Fox stage this week to present one of their typically variegated and lively programs. In addition to such orchestral numbers as "Is It True What They Say About Dixie?" a medley of "I'm Putting All My Eggs in One Basket," "Lights Out," "Alone," "My Old Man" and "You Hit the Spot" and the like, the "ol' maestro" introduces excellent specialties by Billy Wilson and Ray Hendricks, tenors; Col. Manny Prager, singer of topical and comic songs; Billy Severn, acrobatic tap dancer extraordinary, and that amazing young fellow, Joey Rardin, in voice imitations of practically every instrument in the band, plus steel guitar and bagpipes, each one perfect.

Through all of this Bernie strolls nonchalantly about, fiddle in one hand and fat cigar in the other, wise-cracking, taking his pokes at his New York columnist friend and even going so far as to play "Love's Old Sweet Song" beautifully as a violin solo. All very gay, very amusing and packed with fine musicianship. One of the hits that may not be overlooked is the burlesque "Amateur Night on the Radio," with Ben doing a swell imitation of the Major!

An interesting release of the Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's unusually effective overture complete a bill that quite justified the lock-out crowd it attracted at yesterday's first performance.

Comics Who Open on Palace Screen Today

Here we have the quaint Messrs. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy in one of the Gypsy camp scenes from the screen version of the story of "The Bohemian Girl," in which they open today to feature the film bill at Loew's Palace Theater. The name of the young fellow in the middle, who looks as if he had been nosing around in the coal bin, is not known. An added attraction on this program for the new week is the locally made "It Happened in Washington," sponsored by Loew's Inc., and The Washington Post, with Senator Ashurst, Dorothy Ramspeck and James Pendergast featured.

Earle

"SNOWED UNDER." Warner Brothers picturization of Lawrence Saunders' story, adapted to the screen by F. Hugh Herbert, featuring George Brent and Genevieve Tobin, supported by Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Patricia Ellis, John Eldredge and Porter Hall. Directed by Raymond Enright. Reviewed by Dorothea Lewis.

Snowed under is right. Poor Genevieve Tobin and George Brent, pleasant, literate, attractive people, are completely lost in great drifts of boredom and poor attemps at comedy.

The picture tells in jerky, silly terms of the trials and tribulations of one Alan Tanner, playwright and mild Casanova, snowed in, in a Connecticut cottage, with two former wives and a prospective one, but without the third act of his play.

This is certainly nothing much to start with, but Director Raymond Enright makes it less by not making up his mind as to how it should be played. Some characters are outright burlesque, others are just in bad comedy style, while George and Genevieve play straight.

George Brent and Genevieve Tobin succeed at times in being almost credible. (We are still wondering which one wrote the acceptable third act.) Glenda Farrell is really the only one who triumphs over her material, her "Daisy Lowell," tipsy, gold-digging second Tanner wife is really amusing.

"Pirates" Head Stage Bill.

The stage show furnishes one bright spot in the amazing adagio-dancing "Kitchen Pirates," who outdo all other adagio-ers. Lita Doray's lithe little body goes flying perilously through the air and her artfully contrived long bob sweeps the floor in breath-taking fashion.

The Royal Doberman in Pinschers are handsome. Frank Gaby is an able ventriloquist but his material is not too good. The fourth act, Geraldine and Joe, was canceled at the performance reviewed because of illness, and short-screen subjects were substituted.

They included a good newsreel, a so-so Betty Boop cartoon and a weak and time-wasteful Joe Palooka comedy.

Bert Granoff sings well and rousingly—"I've Got Plenty of Nuttin,'" from "Porgy and Bess," and "That's Why Darkies Were Born"—and Aubrey Seiber's gowns rate several stars.

Columbia

"TIMOTHY'S QUEST." Paramount picturization based on the novel by Kate Douglas Wiggin, with screen play by Virginia Van Upp, Dore Schary and Wilbert W. Pratt, featuring Dickie Moore, Eleanore Whitney and Tom Keene, supported by Sally Martin, Virginia Weidler, Bennie Bartlett, Elizabeth Patterson, Esther Dale, Samuel S. Hinds, J. M. Kerrigan, Irene Franklin, Jack Clifford, John Kelly, Raymond Hatton and Ralph Remley. Directed by Charles Barton. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

For much the same homely, human appeal that made the works of Gene Stratton Porter best sellers, the stories and plays of Kate Douglas Wiggin have made their marks in the literary and theatrical worlds. Standing eminently among the home-spun dramas of American rural life is "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and now comes to the screen Mrs. Wiggin's "Timothy's Quest," a tale as honest in theme as it is ingenuous in its cinematic presentation.

It is a delightful picture, this; one peopled by honest human beings, who do real, believable things, without the intrusion of any suggestion of those elements that might in any way be termed "smart" or "sophisticated." It is clean and fresh, redolent of the country, a refreshing and satisfying change from the regular run-of-mill productions.

In this delicately articulated story, Mrs. Wiggin recounts the trials of Timothy and his sister, Gay, who ran away from illicit foster-parents trafficking in orphaned, stray children. Imbued with the cavalier spirit of Don Quixote, Timothy starts on his quest—to find a mother for Gay. That he is a successful is a foregone conclusion, as well as that he should find in that person a mother for himself. Yet before that end is attained, the serious, sincere Timothy has wrought the metamorphosis of a crochety spinster into a real mother and paved the way for the smooth running of the course of true love.

Youngsters Are Hits.

As the lad whose knightly deeds are so unselfishly performed, who but Dickie Moore could satisfy the requirements? No one; and he brings to the role of Timothy still more of the same childish ingenuity and honesty of characterization which have marked his earlier works. Bright-eyed, almost cherubic Sally Martin, a youngster of appealing charm, is the sister no less devoted to her brother than he is to her. Here is, to be sure, an ideal pair—two child actors whose work is entirely complementary—and complimentary!

Among the adults of the company, Elizabeth Patterson, as the somewhat misanthropic maiden lady, who considers little girls as necessary evils—and little boys (and men) as not even necessary—is superb. J. M. Kerrigan and Irene Franklin have the unlovely parts of the traffickers in childhood, but they do their work well.

As the young Lochinvar come out of the West is Tom Keene, star of many a "Western," furnishing the love interest with Eleanore Whitney. Mr. Keene is supposed to be a cowboy, and his part is so constructed that he is permitted to display some of those talents which raised him to stardom among the horse-opera players. Miss Whitney is really nice, even when pictured in a drama of a less-modern era and laid in a New Hampshire country town.

Many Supplementaries.

"Timothy's Quest" is not a great picture, with a tremendous sweep of action and great emotional appeal, but it is a quiet drama, through which surcease from the cares of the day may be attained, and is performed, principally, by two children as lovable as you would any time care to meet and know.

The supporting program is varied and interesting, comprising "The Rookie Fireman," another story recounted by Don ("Uncle Don") Carney about Shorty, Paramount's precocious chimpanzee; "Rhythm of Paree," a musicomedy with Fred Lightner, Nell Kelly, Earl Oxford and Neila Goodelle; "Sun-Chasers," a Grantland Rice Sportlight, announced by Ted Husing, of vitamin D gatherings at Palm Springs, Miami Beach, Del Monte, Waikiki Beach and Nassau, and the Metrotone News.

Metropolitan

"DESIRE." Paramount picturization, under the supervision of Ernst Lubitsch, of a play by Hans Szekely, adapted to the screen by Edwin Justus Mayer, Waldemar Young and Samuel Hoffenstein, co-starring Marlene Dietrich and Gary Cooper and featuring John Halliday, with William Frawley, Ernest Cossart, Alan Mowbray, Akim Tamiroff and Zeffie Tilbury. Directed by Frank Borzage. Reviewed (repeat engagement), Friday morning by Sally Stroud.

Countess Madeline, glamorous, smooth-working jewel thief, steals a two-million-dollar pearl necklace from a Parisian jeweler. Making her way by motor into Spain to join her accomplice, she encounters a young American engineer, also enroute to Spain, for a deserved vacation.

She splatters him with mud, covers him with dust, steals his car and his heart. Her inamorata, Prince Carlos, aghast at Madeline's maneuvers, is forced to invite the American, Jim Bradley, to their villa in San Sebastian. For Madeline has hidden the pearls in his coat pocket.

Following a love idyll at the villa, Madeline foreswears her light-fingered ways, returns the necklace and becomes Mrs. Bradley. Giving up springtime in Paris for the smokestacks of Detroit.

Done with a light adroitness, the story abounds in sophisticated chatter, amusing complications, and the usual Borzage touches of the unpredictable. Gary Cooper is excellent, showing none of his former Western reticence, handling his role as the bungling, naive American with gusto. You will enjoy his warbling. And the single song Marlene croons, "Awake In a Dream."

Wears Dazzling Gowns.

Marlene wears devastating costumes, with new draping feathers and advance furbelows. If anyone could wear gracefully a string of pearls likened to 'tears of mermaids,' she can.

John Halliday, as the Prince, is good; Alan Mowbray, as the psychiatrist, drawn unwittingly into the plot, is good; likewise Ernest Cossart, has some fine scenes.

Paramount News: F. D. R. tells a story; New Pacific clipper has flight; new oil boom hits Texas; the Queen Mary goes to sea; 30 killed in dynamite explosion in Mexico; Notre Dame gridironers report for spring football practice; ten perish in Georgia bus crash; Sonja Henie makes professional debut; electric eye invention will permit future wars to be fought by robot tanks and men; Clyde Beatty teaches wife lion-taming tricks, and a "natural" comedian woefully explains his hard-luck with sweepstakes tickets.

Central High

"CAPTAIN APPLEJACK." The students of Central High School present the comedy-drama in three acts by Walter Hackett, under the direction of Louise Moore. Mrs. Jeanette Kern and Gertrude Walter, with costuming in charge of Mildred Merrill, and stage setting by A. V. Smith. At Central High School, April 2 and 3. Reviewed Thursday evening by W. A. Whitney.

To the students of Central High School in general—for more specific credit cannot be given—should go high commendation for a worthy play worthily presented. The play was Walter Hackett's "Captain Applejack," a comedy of a young but Milquetoastian Englishman and his attempted breakaway from the pacific and very orderly existence of his Cornwall manor.

With plenty of comedy lines and situations, considerably more physical action than is usual, the players romped through a reading which manifestly brought as much pleasure to themselves as to the several hundred applauding spectators.

Charles Grunwell did well by the title role, and especially in act two, when he dreams he is the old pirate, was he enthusiastically imbued with the vigor of the part. Opposite him, funishing the ultimate love interest, was Marjorie Beall, who is not unfamiliar to Washington followers of amateur dramatics. She was everything one might expect of a sweet English lass.

Those In Support.

As Anna Valeska, one of the quintet after the pirate fortune supposedly secreted in the house, was Dorothy Smith, who, as Dorothy Manning, is to be remembered as the Bartfield Players' lovely ingenue. Hers also was a nicely turned delineation.

The others in the illicit treasure quest were played by Nathalie Schurman, Ted Smith, William Dekelbaum and John Swank, all of whom were sufficiently sinister. Jack Greene did a good butler, while Edith Propper was seen all too briefly as the maid. Frances Moskey was admirably equipped to impersonate the elderly aunt, whom she impersonated effectively, and Warne Locklin was the American advertising man, whose brainchild was the yarn of the pirate treasure.

The remaining members of the company gave the principals admirable support.

'The Mikado'

"THE MIKADO." The Tech Opera Club presents the comic opera in two acts, by Gilbert and Sullivan, staged under the general direction of Mrs. Ada Coe. Music accompaniment by the McKinley High School Orchestra, under direction of Dore Walten. In the auditorium of the McKinley High School, April 3 and 4. Reviewed Friday evening by W. A. Whitney.

In the more than ten years that we have been gazing upon things theatrical, an uncounted number of productions of Gilbert and Sullivan's immortal "Mikado" have come within our ken—productions by professionals, and productions by all sorts and conditions of amateurs—but never before have we ever seen this comic opera so enthusiastically sung and so masterfully presented by any school group as by the Tech Opera Club last night.

With a company of some sixty—with boys' and girls' choruses of sufficient size to give the town of Titipu a considerable population—and staged before virtually a single set, the players comprised a group of capable, though young, voices, well matched and blended to bring out the beauty of the many ensembles.

As the "Lord High Everything Else," Poo-Bah, Downer Duffy showed a careful consideration of the role, accounted for with a voice by no means inadequate. Edwin Plowman, as Pish-Tush, was sufficiently august in voice, word and deed.

Nanki-Poo Well Sung.

Particularly fortunate is the group in having Frank Numbers to sing the role of Nanki-Poo. While Mr. Numbers was almost completely unschooled in his spoken lines, his lyrics more than atoned for other shortcomings, singing with gusto or lyric tenderness as occasion demanded.

Robert Racoosin gave the most consistently excellent performance, however, both in the singing and speaking parts of his interpretation of Ko-Ko, scoring his particular ovation with his Hopper-like rendition of "The Flowers That Bloom in the Spring." The title role was played by Alexander Stabler, who gave the Mikado part a lusty reading and scored in "Let the Punishment Fit the Crime" and his tricky little dance—with his umbrella-bearer (William Scullen) abetting.

On the distaff side, Wilor Maxwell made a charming Yum-Yum, and, with Mariana Brumbaugh and Marjorie Brett as the other maids from school, made the trio more than mere decoration.

Special mention should be made of Jane Baldwin who, as Katisha, was one of the most convincing interpreters of the role to come under our notice.

Not the least of the evening's assets was the manner in which the score was played under the direction of Dore Walten by the school's orchestra.

IT was only about this big . . . And its personality was sweetly tender . . . So I ate it . . . And with the swiftness of the wind, I became sick . . . Because I can't stomach this type of vicious porkaganda.

Probably the most successful person at the Plaza Persian Room Wednesday night, when the De Marcos returned to dance to Eddy Duchin's music—was Duchin . . . The Boston boy, who horrified his parents by chucking a pharmacist's career to become a pianist, has $400,000 salted away in annuities . . . Though he's just turned 27 . . . When they sliced his birthday cake, Duchin brought the first piece to Sid Solomon's table . . . It was at Solomon's Central Park Casino that Duchin became a bandleader.

Duchin was exactly 7 years old when Tony De Marco started dancing at the Green Mill Inn, Chicago . . . Today the De Marcos are one of the highest salaried ballroom teams in the world, liquid perfection as a team, the only team that can arouse the conservative Persian Room to shouts of approval and encore calls . . . Only Fred Astaire outranks Tony De Marco in background . . . Fred has been dancing for 23 years.

Ralph Smith, veteran Washington correspondent for the Atlanta Journal, adds to the whisky-aging discussion that has been carried on in this space . . . Citing Harris E. Willingham, associate Federal alcohol administrator, as authority, the Atlanta columnist says "Sullivan might truthfully have added that liquor doesn't 'age' after four years in the wood, for after that period of time it acquires neither age, aroma or bouquet. There is no connoisseur, expert or taster alive who can distinguish between whisky that's four years old and whisky that's been in the barrel for 20 years" . . . Willingham tells Smith that "it is now possible, by the maintenance of a constant temperature in a distillery, 12 months in the year, to age whisky perfectly in three years, because whisky ages only under the effect of heat" . . . Inasmuch as Mr. Smith comes from Georgia, a whisky country, I'll take his word for it.

'Busy Wire' Almost Balked 2-Day Stay

Trenton, N. J., April 3 (AP).—A busy telephone wire almost blocked the grand jury request which stayed Bruno Richard Hauptmann's electrocution three nights ago.

The hour of the execution was near when the grand jury decided to ask for a stay so that it might complete its investigation, an authoritative source revealed tonight.

The grand jury foreman, Major Allyne M. Freeman, and Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall conferred and went to call State prison. New telephone equipment had been installed and neither man was familiar with it. It took several minutes before they were able to put in a call for the prison number.

The line was busy several minutes before the telephone operator was prevailed upon to break the connection and put through the call that spared Hauptmann's life for 72 hours.

Harry Cooper Leads Field in Masters' Tourney as Jones Falters

With Shirley Povich.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 3.—A remarkable fellow, apparently, is Wes Ferrell, who couldn't pitch his way out of a cellophane wrapper if he relied on his fast ball, but who was able to win 25 games for the Boston Red Sox last season.

POVICH.

He learned the art of pitching after he lost the burning fast ball that was his greatest asset when he broke in with the Cleveland Indians as a rookie. A mysterious ailment that attacked his arm and left him bereft of his speed he came to appreciate as a blessing in disguise. Faced with the loss of his sizeable income, he was able to develop a cunning out there on the mound that re-established him as one of the greats of the game.

Unlike Lefty Grove, Fred Marberry and the dozens of other fire-balling pitchers who neglected to learn how to throw a slow curve and thus prolonge their earning ability in the big leagues, Ferrell grimly set imself for the task and emerged last season as the cleverest pitcher in the league.

When he was out there for the Indians fogging the ball past the hitters, he was not great shucks at control. But the new Ferrell now gets by, and very nicely, too, thank you, on control alone. His ability to pitch to a spot, to pull strings on the hitters, is serving him even better than did his fast ball. Those 25 games he won last year are no myth, yet Ferrell, in the parlance of the game, couldn't break a pane of glass at 50 paces

Ferrell's transition from a fast-ball pitcher to a slow baller is no more remarkable, however, than his development as a golfer. He seems, indeed, to be a man of talents. Three years ago he didn't know a golf ball from a cricket bat. For two years now he has been shooting in the 70s

At the professional ball players' tournament at Sarasota last winter, Ferrell wagered $189 on himself and collected $600 in bets by reason of finishing among the leaders.

Baseball fans who saw Ferrell when his speed was failing him with the Indians and watched him fly into fits of rage and disgust with himself, should be willing to believe that he is equally temperamental on the golf course, a place which can bring out probably the finest bits of temper possessed by an individual.

Paul Derringer, ace pitcher of the Cincinnati Reds, who have been the Nats' traveling companions through Georgia, and who played golf with Ferrell throughout the winter at Sarasota, is authority for the following story:

"Ferrell was playing Paul Waner a match at Sarasota for a back hole and was two down at the eighteenth tee, no little displeased with himself for two consecutive topped drives that had cost him two bucks. Eager to redeem himself, he doubled the bet with Waner on the last hole, stepped up to his drive, took a vicious swing and was pained to see the topped ball dribble only 50 yards down the fairway.

"Well, I'm a no good, gut-less, so-and-so," Ferrell cursed as he watched his 50-foot drive come to a stop. Whereupon, he flung his driver into the woods, laid himself flat on his back and banged his head against the iron marker on the tee with such fierceness that folks in the clubhouse dropped their drinks.

The he looked up at Waner and banged his head against the marker once more. Suddenly he bethought himself. "Say, Paul," he gasped, "if I kill myself, that four bucks I owe you is in my left hip pocket."

In Short—

It was one day last summer that Joe Cronin patted Ferrell on the back in Fenway Park and sent him to the mound to start a game—it was during a series in which Cronin had lost two successive games by his own errors. "All right, Wes, let's win this one," said Cronin. Ferrell looked at Cronin steadily for a minute, and said, "All right, Joe, but tell me first which side you're playing on today" . . . The only two times Buddy Lewis has struck out during the Nats' exhibition games was when Paul Derringer, of the Reds, was in the box . . . Buck Newsom still bears the scar where a barber cut him in 1933 at Los Angeles when the earthquake in those parts interrupted his shave.

Kansas Club Advances in Tourney

Globe Refiners Reach Olympic Basket Semifinals.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—The Globe Refiners of Kansas, the tallest basketball team in the world, established themselves favorites to win the tournament as they and three other of the Nation's crack outfits crashed into the semifinals of the Olympic tryouts which opened tonight in Madison Square Garden before 13,000 spectators.

The National A. . U. champions defeated Temple U., 56 to 48, to gain the round of four, over a stubborn Temple University team, pride of the East.

The universities of Arkansas and Washington and the Wilmerding, Pa., Y. M. C. A. outfit had qualified earlier in the evening.

The Oilers will meet Washington's huskies in tomorrow night's second semifinal game, while Wilmerding, Pa., plays the Hollywood Universals, runners-up to the Oilers in the recent A. A. U. National tourney at Denver, in the opening game for the other spot in the finals. The winners meet Sunday.

Results of tonight's tournament, which was opened by Dr. John Naismith, 74-year-old University of Kansas physical director, who invented basketball 45 years ago, follow:

University of Washington, 54; De Paul University, 33.

Temple's men, who looked like midgets alongside the towering Kansans, staged the most remarkable rally of the evening. Trailing 39-20 at half time, the Owls, led by elusive Don Shields, brought the count to 48-50 with two minutes to play. The Oilers, who played something of a sluggish game during the second half, then turned on the heat and held their opponents scoreless as they clicked off six points.

Dunlap to Meet Giles in Golf Title Play

Final Today Will Decide Pinehurst Tourney Winner.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 3.—George T. Dunlap, jr., seeking his fifth North and South Amateur championship and his fourth consecutive one, will meet A. C. Giles, of New York, tomorrow for the title. The final is 36 holes.

Playing superbly in a high wind, Dunlap defeated Art Lynch, of Maramoneck, N. Y., 4 and 3, in the semifinals today, while Giles downed W. E. Stockhausen, of Philadelphia, the 1935 Yale Golf champion, in a 22-hole match. It was the third consecutive year that Dunlap has met and defeated Lynch in the semifinals of this tournament.

In defeating Lynch, Dunlap gave an exhibition that in some respects was even more impressive than when he set an amateur record of 69 in the quarter-finals. He was even 4s for the 15 holes, notwithstanding the high wind, but the feature of his play was the masterful manner in which he made recoveries from bunkers. He was in five of these during the match.

Dunlap was out in 35 and turned 2 up on Lynch, who also was playing fine golf. He became 3 up at the twelfth when Lynch misses a 2-footer and closed out the match on the fifteenth by dropping a 7-foot putt.

Giles was 3 up with 3 to play in his match with Stockhausen, but sour shots tossed away the lead and they went to extra holes. Both were in trouble off the tee on the first extra which they halved in 5s. On the second extra Giles was again in difficulty with his drive and took 3 to get home, but Stockhausen, just off the green in 2, chipped short and again they had 5s.

The third extra was halved in par 4s with Giles negotiating a half stymie to sink a 5-footer. On the long fourth Stockhausen pulled his drive into a road, hit a tree with his second, was short with his third and over with his fourth and Giles won with a par 5.

Stars Swim to World's Records

By the United Press.

CHICAGO, April 3. — Three world's records fell tonight as America's Olympic swimming and diving candidates fought for national recognition in hte annual A. A. U. Indoor championships.

Despite the bitter competition of an Olympic year, only one national champion was dethroned in the furious drive for the six crowns at stake. Jack Medica, Dick Degener, the world-famous New York Athletic Club 400-yard relay team and the New York Women's Swimming Association 300-yard medley team all survived the onslaught. Only Mrs. Lenore Kight Wingard, her challenge beaten off by husky youngsters in their teens, lost her title defense.

Set New Relay Mark.

Two world records were shattered as the Women's Swimming Association of New York won the 300-yard medley race for the second consecutive year. Leading off, Eleanor Holm Jarrett broke her own world 100-yard back stroke mark and the team finished out the scheduled distance by clipping 8.8 seconds off the world relay record.

Mrs. Jarrett's new time was 1 minute 7.3 seconds. The relay champions were clocked in 3 minutes 30 seconds.

Johnny Higgins, Providence, R. I., breast-stroke star, broke another world mark with a spectacular finish in the men's 220-yard breast stroke. Higgins, forced to the limit by Ray Kafe, Detroit, poked his head into the flags in 2 minutes 39.3 seconds, as compared with the recognized record held by Leonard Spence, of New York. Spence, the champion, did not compete.

Medica In Victory.

Medica, be-spectacled Seattle free styler, made a tremendous fight to retain his 220-yard championship and the opposition came from an unexpected quarter. Ralph Gilman, towering Ohio State swimmer, smashed into the lead with only 15 yards of the race remaining. Medica, holder of ten world records, turned on all his power and won by a scant margin. Ralph Flanagan, Miami, the logical challenger, was third.

For the fifth straight year, Dick Degener, lithe Detroit Athletic Club diver, captured the national high-board crown. Marshall Wayne, Miami, and Al Greene, national lowboard king, finished two-three behind the chmpion, but Degeners' title was never in serious danger.

Mrs. Wingard lost her 220-yard free-style championship to the most perfectly conditioned girl swimmer in this year's meet, Mary Lou Petty, of the Washington Athletic Club. She has been in peak racing form all week and her record was not surprising. Miss Petty set a new American record of 2:34.2.

A nine-hole playoff was scheduled for this afternoon.

Eastern Five Eliminated By 36-34

A Staff Correspondent.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., April 3.—The strange reality of defeat jolted Eastern High out of its Eastern States tournament basketball championship here tonight. A highly keyed, flashy Brown Prep team from Philadelphia flung the late wonder five from Washington out of the tournament with a 36-34 defeat, which in similar cases has been called heart-breaking.

It was a bitter chapter which wrote on Eastern's record its first loss of the season to a scholastic team. It saw the Washington team spot the Pennsylvania Prep School champions to a 28-14 lead in the first half and then come back to tie the score at 32-32 with four minutes to play, only to succumb to two long, looping shots in the closing moments.

Those two desperate tosses, heaved from far out on the floor by Chunky Johnnie Wise spelled the finish for the almost impossible uphill fight Eastern had displayed in the second half. Coming back after the intermission 14 points behind, the Northeast tossers proceeded to outscore the prep school team, 16 to 3 in the third quarter.

The terrific pace of this period began making itself felt in the last quarter and it appeared that after Eastern had tied the count at 32-32 it had shot its bolt.

Eastern Plays 'Consolation Tilt.'

The victory sent Brown into the finals where it will meet White Plains, N. Y. High tomorrow night for the championship won last year by Eastern. White Plains eliminated La Salle Academy, crack Catholic team from New York, 32 to 29 in the other semi-final. Eastern will meet La Salle in an ironic, meaningless "consolation" encounter as a preliminary.

Although newspapermen expressed the opinion that Brown was playing far over its head, the fact remains that Eastern had only its miserable first-half showing to blame for the defeat. Not only did Brown flash one of the speediest offensives, featured by mile-a-minute dribbling, that Eastern had seen all season, but it also was aided remarkably by some of the most awkward passing Eastern has uncovered since the boys played basketball in knee pants on the Virginia avenue playground.

The Philadelphia team started out by taking 12-3 lead in the first four minutes of play. Harry Mack, Brown center, was getting the tap on Buddy Shaner. Wise and Harold Chern, a couple of bewildering dribblers, were literally running rings around Reds Schneible. Chick Hollidge, Bill Buckholtz and later Clint Quentrille, who replaced Buckholtz.

Only Dopey Dean in Form.

Only Dopey Dean was anywhere near normal form. Brown's spectacular dribbling had Eastern virtually blinded and things got so bad that Brown soon began sticking in sleeper shots to make the rout seem worse.

Eastern was fumbling passes and several times passed perfectly to Brown players who thereupon dribbled full tilt for baskets. Eastern was getting an education in the use of the dribble if nothing else. Farmer Colley, late in the half, missed an easy sleeper shot which proved extremely serious as things turned out.

With the start of the second half, Eastern began looking like the great team it has been in the past. The boys' furious fighting captured the hearts of the pro-Brown crowd and a chant for Eastern went up.

Dean, Hollidge, Dean, Scheible, Hollidge, Sheible and then Dean, Dean and Dean scored in that order to pull the count down to 31-30 in Brown's favor as the last quarter started. A foul shot by Chern started the period, but Hollidge tied the score at 32-32 on a pass from Dean as the crowd's roar reverberated.

Eastern was fighting insanely, but Brown then began gambling on long shots every time it got the ball nad Kuhn swished through two in a row. Shaner tapped in Eastern's last basket to make it 36-34 as Hollidge missed a foul shot, but Washington's last hopes bounded away with the ball as with 30 seconds to go a pass from Scheible to Shaner bounced off the center's chest. Brown pounced on the ball and held it and the championship to the finish.

Chicagoan Shoots Sub-par 70 To Top Espinosa by 2 Strokes; Bobby's Putting Costly to Hopes

Setting Pace for Augusta Field

By the Associated Press.

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 3.—Riding high on a cold gale that all but ruined this year's comeback hopes of the great Bob Jones and otherwise buffeted an all-star golf field unmercifully, "Light-Horse Harry" Cooper galloped out in front in today in the first round of the $5,000 Augusta National Invitation Tournament.

The Chicago professional, who lost a play-off to Tommy Armour nine years ago for the American Open Championship, outshot old-man par and his nearest rival by two strokes with a 70 that was sensational under the treacherous scoring circumstances.

Espinosa was the only other player to come within two shots of perfect golf as the frigid blast scattered favorites all over the Georgia countryside.

Jones Troubled in Getting 78.

Dropping quickly from the optimistic spot of betting favorite, Jones started so badly that he had a hard struggle to finish this first round in 78, six shots over par, eight strokes behind the leader and tied for twenty-sixth place in the field of 53 starters. On the slippery, rain-soaked and wind-swept greens, Jones' famous "Calamity Jane" lost her practice touch and Bob was unable to overcome the loss of four strokes on as many holes at the outset.

Jones was just another long shot tonight, after being backed down to 6 to 1 in the pre-tournament wagering, but he had lots of company. His playing companion, Gene Sarazen, who won last year's Augusta battle with the aid of a "double eagle," had to drop an 8-foot putt on the eighteenth green for a birdie 3 to duplicate Jones' 78.

Nearly a score of players failed to break 80, and Craig Wood, of New York, runner-up here for the past two years, barely broke 90. Wood started with a 7, reached the turn in 45 and finished with an 88 in today's biggest blow-up.

Little Shoots a 75.

A trio of professionals, Bill Burke, of Cleveland, Ted Luther, of Youngstown, Ohio, and Horton Smith, of Chicago, the 1934 tournament winner, tied for third place with 74s.

A half dozen others were deadlocked at 75, including the latest professional recruit, Lawson Little, jr., of San Francisco; Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa., star of the winter circuit; Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond; Ky Laffoon, of Chicago; Alvin (Butch) Krueger, of Beloit, Wis., and Ed Dudley, the Augusta pro.

Dudley and Picard, out in 34 and 35, respectively, both tossed away chances to move out in front. Dudley had the best nine of the day, but was "blown down" by the wind and carded 41 on the incoming route. Picard three-putted three greens and took an incoming 40. Horton Smith also skidded after trimming a stroke from par with an outgoing 35.

The present holder of the American Open title, Sam Parks, jr., of Pittsburgh, shot a 76. Walter Hagen, despite his long familiarity with blustery playing conditions, did no better than 77. Except for lanky Chick Chin, of Japan, who got a 76, the foreign contingent took a beating.

Under the combined circumstances of 40-degree weather, a penetrating wind swirling out of the northwest, Cooper turned in a remarkable performance. The British-born sharpshooter, playing as his shots well, had four birdies.

Over Par on Only One Hole.

He was over par only on the first hole, which he three-putted, and the seventeenth, where he misjudged his approach. But for these slips and a bit of bad luck on the long fifteenth, where he took three to get down from the edge of the green, Cooper would have cracked 70 and opened a bigger gap.

Espinosa had a remarkable round which included 16 of the 18 holes in even par. The 39-year-old Castilian, who lost a playoff to Bobby Jones for the national open crown in 1929, was never in trouble and rarely even off the line as he gauged the wind beautifully with his long shots. He had one birdie, thanks to a 25-foot putt for a deuce on the 190-yard fourth, but offset this by taking three puts on the next green.

Jones and Sarazen, bringing up the rear, had the disadvantage of playing on greens that were somewhat rough and consequently more difficult to judge.

Jones Misses Short Putts.

Neither played up to their championship standard, however. Together they had only three birdies, Jones with an 8-foot put for 4 on the eighth, Sarazen on the second and eighteenth.

Jones missed putts of scarcely a yard on each of the first three greens, and when he missed the fourth green with his tee shot, losing another stroke to par, it was strictly an uphill proposition for the Georgian.

The one-time king of golf was steadier the rest of the way, under

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 3. The Washington ball club made good its escape from Georgia tonight with its three-game winning streak intact and all members of the team present or accounted for.

The preservation of the Nats' infant winning streak was just a breeze, requiring only the cancellation of today's game with the Reds scheduled at Rome, but the escape from Georgia was no mean task.

Following their melodramatic exit from Cordele a few hours before a violent windstorm struck the town Thursday, killing 16 persons, the Nats discovered today that they were still in the path of Nature's wrath. At Rome, where they were to have met the Reds in the fifth and final game of their barnstorming series, rising flood waters added a new peril.

Even as they sat in their hotel at Rome, awaiting word on the probable cancellation of the game, the swollen waters of the Chattanooga River lapped at their feet, inundating cars parked across the street and threatening to engulf the hotel at any moment.

Water Causes Cancellation.

And that wasn't all. Pneumonia was in the air, what with the temperature dropping to 24 degrees above and driving the citizens indoors. Manager Bucky Harris, after an inspection of the Rome park, which featured a centerfield under a foot of water, refused to permit his team to take the field despite the insistence of Manager Charley Dressen of the Reds that the game be played.

Whether the game was canceled on account of the cold or the fact that the city was in the process of being well-dunked, was not officially announced, but the situation was such that the Nats arranged to take the first train out of the place late this afternoon.

With the sinister-looking waters coursing through Rome's streets, and rising at a rate that imperiled the city, Road Secretary Billy Smith, of the Nats, ordered the team to quit the hotel and make for the railroad depot a half hour early.

The players piled into taxicabs which could have found use for pontoons as they plied toward to the railway station, with water reaching to the hubs and, in spots, washing up through the floorboards.

The station they found high and dry, but the usual hour-and-a-half trip to Chattanooga required three hours, with trainmen proceeding at a slow rate in fear of trestle washouts.

The Nats had a good look at a real flood. Most of the countryside between Rome and Chattanooga was far under water, with only roof tops showing in many sections.

Georgia's flood waters washed out, among other things, the scheduled pitching debut of young Kendall Chase against big league opposition. Chase was to have gone to the mound against the Reds yesterday and Manager Harris, who had failed to see him pitch his impressive nine innings against Louisville and remembered him only as a wild lefthander, was keenly awaiting the chance to watch the rookie work.

But with the opening of the season drawing diminishing, Harris is foregoing an assignment for Chase in his efforts to condition the pitchers on whom he is pinning his chief hopes. Thus Jimmy DeShong will go to the mound against the Lookouts tomorrow with Monte Weaver also due to get a chance to pitch here.

Weaver is perilously close to release by the Nats as a result of his ineffective work in the exhibition games and his failure to curb enemy hitters has been a distinct disappointment to Harris. Banking on a comeback by Weaver as an aid to his staff, Harris is ready to give up on the fellow who apparently not only has failed to regain his speed but is wild in addition.

Eager to learn to what extent he may rely upon his new catching acquisition, Walter Millies, Harris plans to send him behind the bat in virtually all of the Nats' remaining games. Millies came to the Nats touted as a cleverer receiver than any on the staff, and if he lives up to those notices, Harris is willing to sacrifice a bit of hitting power to give the team added protection behind the bat.

Furr to Defend Title Against Wright

PHIL FURR will make the third defense of his District welterweight championship at Turner's Arena next Tuesday night when he faces Cary Wright, another local product, in a contest scheduled for 15 rounds. In previous title bouts, Furr stopped Sid Silas in 13 rounds and soundly trounced Bob Wilson over the 15-round distance.

Furr has won five consecutive fights against the best opposition available. Besides Wilson and Silas, he has defeated Mickey Serlian and Steve Halaiko. Furr took a decision from Halaiko in their first meeting and scored a knockout over Steve in a return engagement.

Since coming out of retirement and starting up the comeback trail, Wright has scored ten victories, including knockouts of LeRoy Zinkham, Red Tucker and Charley Thompson.

Irish Johnny Dean, the whirlwind lightweight, will return to the wars against Manny Wibble, former Baltimore amateur champion, in a six-round preliminary. Dean has not worked for a few weeks since fighting two sensational draws with Welterweight Pete Galiano.

The card is being held Tuesday night instead of Monday because of a Jewish holiday on the regular fight night.

European Tour For Baer and Louis Aim

By the United Press.

PARIS, April 3.—Jeff Dickinson, Europe's outstanding sports promoter, sailed on the Europa for New York today planning to bring Joe Louis and Maxie Baer to Europe and to complete arrangements for a Jack Dempsey heavyweight tourney in Paris.

Dickinson, an erstwhile American soldier who remained in France after the war, claimed to have completed arrangements to bring Joe Louis to Europe for an exhibition tour.

He plans to show the Brown Bomber in France, Spain, the British Isles, Portugal, Switzerland, Austria, Sweden, Belgium, Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Then Jeff expects to offer Maxie Baer a chance to come back with three bouts in Paris, London and Madrid.

Sandwiched in between these fistic negotiations, Dickson has slated a trip to Montreal to attend an ice hockey conference, hoping to arrange for National Hockey League stars to show at his Palais des Sports in Paris, where hockey has become a banner sport.

Jeff also is a director of Albert Hall, in London, site of many important boxing bouts. He also controls the bull rings in Madrid—and has taken a few lessons in bull fighting.

Padgham Wins Golf Play.

Bramshot, England, April 3 (AP).—Alf Padgham, 1935 Ryder Cup player, today won the Daily Mail £2,000 72-hole golf tournament with an aggregate score of 284. Padgham fired a 68 on the final round. Sam King finished second with 287.

'Bochy' Koch Signs As G. W. Coach

Barton (Bochy) Koch, line coach of Baylor University football team for the last three years, yesterday accepted a similar position at George Washington University, the Associated Press reports.

A graduate of Baylor and star lineman for the Bears in his prime, Koch is known to have conferred with Jib Pixlee when the Colonials' director of athletics recently toured the Midwest. Later they exchanged communications, Koch holding out for more money than Pixlee offered.

He will leave Waco, Tex., immediately for Washington, arriving in time to assist in the remainder of spring practice which is in progress at the downtown school.

69 of 97 Experts Pick Tigers to Win Flag

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—The Nation's sports editors and baseball writers have made the Detroit Tigers prime favorites to snare the American League pennant for the third successive year.

Sixty-nine of the 97 experts who participated in the Associated Press' tenth annual pennant poll, the results of which were announced today, picked the Tigers to repeat their 1934 and 1935 marches to the league championship.

The addition of Al Simmons, slugging outfielder, to the world champions' ensemble evidently persuaded the big majority of experts that no other club had a real chance to dethrone Mickey Cochrane's formidable Bengals.

Detroit was picked for third place in the 1935 poll, and for fourth in the 1934 consensus.

The chief surprise of the balloting was the failure of the costly Boston Red Sox to draw heavier pennant support. Despite the addition of such outstanding performers as Jimmie Foxx, Roger Cramer, John Marcum and Eric McNair, the Red Sox were given only 16 first-place votes and wound up as second-place nominees in the final tally.

The only other clubs given first-place consideration at all were the New York Yankees and the Cleveland Indians, the 1935 poll's pennant favorites. The Yankees, although they received only four votes for first place against eight for Cleveland, beat out the Indians for third place. Joe McCarthy's hirelings drew much heavier support for second and third positions than did Cleveland.

The closest battles were for fifth, sixth and seventh positions, with the Chicago White Sox, St. Louis Browns and Washington Senators finally being rated in that order by razor-edge margins. The Philadelphia Athletics, wrecked by trades, were almost unanimously picked for the cellar. Eighty-seven of the poll participants thought Connie Mack's club would wind up in last place.

Miss Careful's Closing Rush Wins by Half Length at Bowie

Winner Pays $20; Track Is Heavy

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

BOWIE RACE TRACK, April 3.—Miss Careful, practically a native of this race track, having spent the cold winter over by the 6-furlong chute while others were basking in the tropical sun, scored a smashing victory over a field of six in the Crisfield Handicap, today's feature race here. Running as if she liked to run, the 6-year-old mare, heroine of many a thrilling finish in Maryland, bounced to the imaginary wire a half-length in front of Morpluck, stake winner and former Derby and Preakness hope. A length and a half farther back came Home Loan to take third money.

Miss Careful, owned by Walt Elliott of this Prince George's County, was given a powerful ride by young Carl Hanford, particularly in the late stretch run where she needed help the most.

Track Very Heavy.

The daughter of Chance Ray ran the six furlongs in 1:15 1-5, billygoat time, due to the heavy, holding track that made the horses run with wads of mud on each hoof. She was not fancied by the heavy money and cheered the hearts of the chosen few with a $20 mutuel.

Chilly winds greeted the 5,000 who turned out for the sport. The coffee and hot dog stands as well as the two bars got a terrific play from the customers.

The daily double proved the highest mutuel of the meeting to date. The winning combination of Vitascope and Little Argo rewarded the faithful with a pay-off of $85.90 for each $2 investment.

Vitascope, the property of Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark, ran in accordance with a last-minute plunge in the betting. The Vito gelding, paying a $4.90 mutuel, won as Jockey Bobby Merritt pleased, merely galloping to the finish line ahead of El Contento and Engles Boy, a pair of longshots. Fez, the heavily played horse from the Vanderbilt barn, was away sluggishly, ran a good race but missed getting in the payoff. The field was one of cheap maidens.

Whiscenda Surprises.

The daily dash for juveniles provided an upset when Whiscenda made a show of his field at a $13.20 mutuel. Ridden by the popular Harry Richards, Whiscenda did not lag, taking command within the opening furlong and held sway thereafter to take the decision from Quincy and Traitress. Story Time, the favorite, was a disappointing fourth in the field of seven.

The third race was a Washington victory. Little Argo, at the juicy mutuel of $34.20, turned the trick with a nose decision over M. J. Brennan, the public choice, which had a head margin over Dalmatia in a blanket finish. Owned by C. Hazelton, trained by W. H. Denaham, and ridden by Jockey Eddie Smith, all Washingtonians, Little Argo ran a powerful race and stuck to his guns with rare courage. M. J. Brennan was forced to race on the outside all the way.

Lieut. Greenock Wins.

Lieut. Greenock, lukewarm in betting, overcame a poor beginning to triumph in the fourth race, at an $8 mutuel. The son of Greenock, capably ridden by Jockey Mouse Peters, gained steadily throughout the running to score by three lengths over Genie Malatine. Third in the field of seven was Peter Pumpkin.

The closest finish of the meeting materialized in the sixth race and brought booes from the crowds. The photo finish not having been installed, the betters had to take the judges' word for the fact that One Chance had beaten Royal Gold. Calling it a nose decision would be exaggerating. However, the pay-off was on One Chance at $6.50 mutuel. He was Carl Hanford's second winner of the day.

Dear Al: Bowie Race Track, Md., April 3.

The knowledge that he was about to begin a journalistic career by writing the racing notes for me, did not work an improvement in Clocker Mike. The story just got to me and it's still good even if it's a day old. Two reporters from The Post were at the track yesterday. They had to leave after the fifth race and on the way through the paddock met Mike. Trying to make a hit, Mike whispered that he had a hot tip in the seventh race. The reporters told him that they had to leave and confessed that they didn't have two bucks between them to make a bet. So Mike ups and says: "I'll lend you each a dollar and I'll make the bet for you. The horse is QUIET PLEASE." Last night Mike walked into the office and paid off the smiling reporters. But that's not the punch of the yarn. Before the race started, Mike listened to a group of touts and decided to book the bet. In the final analysis, Mike tipped the reporters, loaned them the money, held the bet and paid off—with a smile, which is to his credit.

BILL.

First race—Lotofus is no bargain as a race horse but might do in company of this sort. Has plenty of speed but stops. However, that last may have been a tightener. I'm going to string along. Phrixus comes off a distance race but showed speed and will be dangerous. Prosy to take care of the others.

Second race—Bacon made two moves behind Dreel here yesterday and appeared to be a mighty fit horse. Will have his hands full to beat Portden at the weights but I'm going to take a chance. Portden is as sharp as that last win. Sangfroid went evenly last out.

Third race—The Millay, off Florida form, should take these in camp with something to spare. Hiatus, a Vanderbilt charge, should go well in the company. Peace Move and Canrock hold some chance.

Fourth race—Dalmatia, if sent back, would be a keen factor if not the winner in this race. She might have won her sprint today but for being in close quarters in the stretch and will appreciate the longer route. Our Ship was star last year and is the one to beat. Secured, a brisk worker, for the show.

Fifth race—Stubbs showed an excellent effort behind Singing Wood in the Inaugural and may be ready to defeat this kind. Shipped from Florida in excellent shape, he figures to do a lot of running. The Vanderbilt entry of Speed to Spare and Winter Sport are reported in good form and will be contenders. Detonator at the light weight, may surprise.

Sixth race — Peradventure has worked kindly over this track and meets a field that may succumb to his brand of speed. Chatmoss and New Deal to take care of the others.

Seventh race—Billowy Wave, with Sammy Palumbo in the saddle might improve on that first effort here and step home in this field. Naval Cadet and Taunton for the place and show.

Best bet—The Millay.

Georgetown Prep Upsets Western, 2-1

Powell Hurls No-Hit Game To Win

Walk, Error, Account for Crimson's Lone Tally in Third Inning.

LED by Southpaw DeSales Powell, Georgetown Prep baseball captain, who pitched a no-hit game, the Little Hoyas opened their season yesterday at Garrett Park with a surprising 2-to-1 victory over Western. Powell, a local product, struck out 15 men.

All circumstances prior to the game pointed to a Western victory. The home club was supposed to have been crippled by the loss of First Baseman John Crosby through injury, and the Crimson was fresh from an impressive win over National Training School, but Powell's brilliance more than offset Prep's difficulties.

Having reached first on an error by Lawyer, O'Shaugnessy accounted for Georgetown's first run in the first inning after Byrd had sacrificed and Higgins had hit to short.

Franklin scored what proved to be the deciding run in the fourth, when Morse singled to center, bringing Franklin in from second base. Fielding honors went to Doyle and Edmonston, Western's first baseman and centerfielder, respectively.

Leapley Wins Relief Golf Tourney

BOB LEAPLEY won the Rock Creek relief golf tournament yesterday, defeating Bernard K. Yount, jr., 16-year-old St. Albans student, on the twentieth hole in a thrilling final.

Leapley led one up at the turn, thanks to a birdie at the eighth. Going to the seventeenth, Yount was in front one up. He missed his second shot on the eighteenth, and dropped the hole. They halved the nineteenth in pars, and on the twentieth Leapley played two nice shots to the green for his par four, as Yount was short in two, and wound up with a five.

Bill Wilhelm defeated R. Greene, 2 and 1 in the second flight, and F. M. McAleavy defeated R. Pikutart, 2 and 1, in the third flight.

East Potomac's golf course will be open today, Harry Graham, manager, announced last night.

Twenty-seven holes will be playable. They are nine on B side, nine on F and nine on G.

The East Potomac greenskeeper and his staff have been working overtime in an effort to get the course in shape, following the recent flood. Only a few of the holes were damaged by the high water, Graham said, and they will be in use in another few weeks.

B. G. Ferris, jr., 19, scored a hole-in-one on the 127-yard first hole of the War College course yesterday. He has only played three rounds of golf in his life. Alan Burton, Army and Navy pro, who is teaching him, said. Ferris used a mashie.

Bob Slye Shifts Tactics, Rivals; Quits Running and Socks 'Em

By Lewis F. Atchison.

After running away from his opponents for three years, Bob Slye, University of Maryland track ace, finally turned around and gave one a good sock on the chin and promptly found himself launched on a boxing career that has more promise than the legal terms of a 90-day bank note.

Because he won the interhigh hurdling championship at Eastern and graduated with the All-East scholastic title, it was only natural for Maryland officials to suppose that Slye's ability and ambitions were confined exclusively to track. The lad entertained other ideas on the subject, however. He wanted to box.

He wanted to fight primarily because he liked the sport. Secondly, he figured that all trackmen are regarded as energetic beings who can't do anything in an athletic way but run around in their panties, and he wanted to disprove that theory. At first glance the casual observer might suspect him of singing a rather squeaky tenor in the neighborhood church choir, but seeing him in the ring would quickly revise such an opinion.

Bob's first fight was not with a trackman, but with a larger opponent following an auto accident. Said larger opponent was laid flatter than a strip of linoleum. The incident only served to whet the lad's already avaricious appetite for the game.

He finally got his chance in the annual spring intramurals, in which the keynote is every man for himself.

Slye's first varsity bout ended after 1:27 minutes of fighting in the second round with his opponent, a cadet from Virginia Military Institute, stretched prone on the resin rug. Later he was entered in the Southern Conference tournament, but withdrawn in favor of a teammate who was serving his last season in the Black and Gold livery.

Slye never has won the Southern Conference hurdling crown, although that's supposed to be his best sport, simply because he never has competed. Last year a bruised heel forced him out of competition and the year before it was a bad ankle. He'll be in there taking the fences in stride this spring, though, and he has a good chance of winning.

The youngster's ambitions are directed toward a military career, preferably naval aviation. He will graduate in June, but unless he gets into the service he'll return to Maryland for post-graduate work and another year of boxing.

Slye thinks boxing is more fun than running and that both are gruelling grinds. They leave you on the verge of exhaustion, ready to quit, and sometimes nauseated. The last few yards are the toughest in running and the last few seconds of boxing just as tough. Among boxers, he thinks, there is a truer camaraderie than among trackmen. He's not quite certain why.

Boxing gives him a greater number of thrills, win or lose, although he has never experienced defeat. A boxer receives more recognition, too, although he thinks a trackman, because of the long hours of practice, deserves more press notices. The proof? Well, this story.

Heurich Brewer Nine To Oppose G. U. Today

The Heurich Brewery baseball team will meet the Georgetown University nine this afternoon instead of the St. Mary's Celtics. The game will be played at 3 o'clock on the Hoyas' field.

Manager Bill Flester, who at first scheduled the Celtics, made the change because he thought that a college team would be in better shape this early in the season than a sandlot nine.

Tigers Break Camp; Simmons Is Worry

Lakeland, Fla., April 3 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers broke camp today, heading for Columbia, S. C., where they engage the Cincinnati Reds tomorrow. Manager Cochrane was just a bit worried over the failure of Al Simmons to attain his speed of former years, but he expected to sacrifice some defensive outfield strength for batting power when he acquired the Duke of Milwaukee, and probably will be satisfied if the power is forthcoming.

Michigan Commission Approves Shikat Bout

Detroit, April 3 (AP).—Dick Shikat's proposed tour of Michigan in defense of his recently won claim to the heavyweight wrestling title appeared assured tonight by action of the State athletic board of control.

The board ruled that Shikat, under suspension in Indiana and Tennessee for alleged failure to fulfill contracts, may engage in a match here Monday night with John Leon Grandovitch.

Colonials Beat Vermont Nine In Cold, 9-5

George Washington's diamond forces defeated Vermont and the weather in an unexpected and unannounced twin-bill yesterday on the East Ellipse. The Colonials outbatted the touring Catamounts, 9-5, in a chattering good ball game, but the victory over the weather was one of those moral decisions.

So cold and unsettled for baseball was the day that both teams were fielding with their fists and running stiff-legged. At a late hour last night they were reported to be thawing out in good style with the aid of steam heat.

Bill Lanier received credit for the Colonials' second straight victory, although Vince De Angelis finished the game when Lanier's pitching arm froze in the sixth inning and threatened to lose the battle. De Angelis fanned the last three men to face him, using a smoke ball for the physical and moral effect.

Russ Sunderland, who was batted off the mound in six innings and relieved by Lefty Beade, was the losing pitcher. Bob Williams, of George Washington, captured batting honors with four for four, one a double. To climax the day, Joe Brennan, former Western High School ace, stole Vermont's signals.

Bowlers Honor 'Pop' Crawley At Rainier

A LARGE entry of duckpin bowlers from the Capital and vicinity will honor "Pop" Crawley, 70-year-old veteran of the mapleways, tonight at the Mt. Rainier alleys.

The stakes consist of five games to be rolled on a handicap basis with cash prizes being awarded to the winners. It is an annual affair, organized by Larry Fitzgerald, president of the Mount Rainier League and Crawley's popularity will go a long way toward boosting the field to around the half-century mark.

The final five games of the Masonic-Knights of Columbus annual match will be rolled April 25 at the Convention Hall alleys, it was announced last night. The Caseys' got the nod in the last meeting of the two teams and will enter the match with a slight advantage.

Local duck pinners are making their bid for national recognition today and night in the National Duckpin Bowling Congress championships at Hartford, Conn.

Tonight's activity winds up the ninth annual tournament of the congress after a week of postponement due to the recent floods, an unlooked for circumstance which seriously impaired the record entry expected by the committee.

Allison and Grant Advance in Tennis

Houston, Tex., April 3 (AP).—Wilmer Allison, of Austin, and Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, top-seeded in the annual River Oaks tennis tournament, advanced into the semifinals today with victories over Wilbur Hess, of Houston, and Charles R. Harris, of West Palm Beach, Fla.

Grant finished strong to eliminate the improving Florida player, 7—5, 4—6, 6—1, 6—2. Allison gained a 6—1, 6—3, 2—6, 7—5 decision over Hess, national intercollegiate champion last year.

Allison, the Nation's top-ranking netter in 1935, will play young Hal Surface, of Kansas City, and Grant will meet J. Gilbert Hall, East Orange, N. J., veteran, in the semifinals tomorrow.

Volley Ball Tourney Will Begin Today at 'Y'

The fifth annual Cherry Blossom volley ball championships will swing into action this morning at 10 o'clock in the Central Y. M. C. A. gymnasium with the most stellar field to date in the running.

Perhaps the strongest competition that the defending champion Philadelphia North Branchers face will be provided by the Naugatucks, of Connecticut, who recently captured the New England title.

The rest of the field includes teams from Germantown, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Roanoke, Va.; Jamaica, N. Y., and a local aggregation. All teams, losing in the first round, will be eligible for the consolation tournament.

France Will Play U. S. In Olympic Ball Game

Chicago, April 3 (AP).—Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic committee, said tonight that France has agreed to meet the United States in an exhibition baseball game to be played in the Olympic games stadium in Berlin the night of August 12.

Brundage said Dr. Carl Diem, of Berlin, secretary of the organizing committee of the games, informed him by letter of France's willingness to participate.

Out Fishin' . . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

HERE is news that anglers have been awaiting: Large schools of channel bass have arrived in Oregon Inlet, N. C. Capt. Earl Mann, noted caterer to the angling fraternity, advises this writer that the bass put in their appearance last Wednesday. This news is unusual, because channel bass seldom arrive in the inlet prior to April 20. Mann tried outside, in the ocean, and caught eight large ones in a short time. He predicts an early fishing season along the North Carolina coast, which should advance fishing in local waters approximately two weeks.

When large schools of bass arrive this early it is a sure bet the bluefish are not far behind. Reports received from points south of Wanchez prove that good fishing will be available in Oregon Inlet for channel bass from now on.

Weather conditions, however, may play an important part in reversing these predictions but the writer will attempt to post his readers regarding daily activity. Do not forget to make your reservations now because club, hotel owners, and boatmen advise this column that solid bookings are now being made daily. Many parties are engaging boatmen daily for two weeks. One party of "old timers" from Chicago have booked a Coast Guard (retired) boatman for the entire month of May.

Fishermen to Get Help.

For the convenience of our readers a list of reliable boatmen, clubs, hotels and lodging places for anglers will be published herein in the Sunday edition of The Washington Post in order that reservations for later dates may be made prior to April 20. Capt. Jack Leavell, Atlantic, N. C., reports very large schools of channel bass in the vicinity of Harbor Island, which is at the upper end of Core Sound, bordering Pamlico Sound.

Plenty of large flounders are being taken daily in these waters. Drum Inlet is also very active. Capt. Sam and Dewey Tillett, of Wanchez, their appetites having been sharpened by a cold winter, are ready to visit the fishing grounds in rejuvenated boats. Both are noted for their ability to satisfy even the most experienced anglers, who expect the best under average conditions. The writer for many years has known that North Carolina boatmen are a fine, clean, able-bodied group of men, who, because of their sport fishing, are capable of adding many happier days to our lives, sending us home better fitted for the things that make life worth the living. To know what real fishing is you must go to Oregon Inlet this spring and get your share of channel bass and the bluefish that inhabit these waters, millions of them.

Surfcasting Enjoyed.

During inclement weather surfcasting may be enjoyed. In fair weather one may gaze with awe upon a bronze-colored surface of channel bass, their backs glittering in the sun. The boats that are used on the North Carolina coast deserve mention: All are built for safety because of the narrow approach into the Atlantic. Modern conveniences are provided. Hatteras has taught the best of them to respect the law of the sea.

$276,345,500 Issues Coming On the Market

B.-M. T., National Dairy and Youngstown Tube Refundings.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 3.—Security offerings totaling $186,345,500, considerde among the most important in several years, were being prepared today for public presentation by underwriting houses.

The Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation, New York, has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington a registration statement covering an issue of $48,000,000 of Rapid Transit collateral trust 3½ per cent serial bonds and $61,000,000 of Rapid Transit collateral trust bonds, 4¼ per cent series, due May 1, 1966. The two issues are the largest amount of corporate securities ever covered under a single registration statement filed with the secretary.

National Dairy Products.

Underwriters headed by Goldman, Sachs & Co., prepared an issue of $62,545,500 of National Dairy Products Corporation 3¾ per cent debentures, due May 1, 1951, with common stock purchase warrants attached, for offering to holders of common stock and existing debentures of the company. The offering, priced at 100½ per cent, is the largest issue of industrial securities so far registered with the S.E.C. and proceeds will be used, together with other funds, to retire outstanding 5¼ per cent debentures.

Atlantic Refining Co. is offering to holders of its 2,664,000 shares of common stock a new issue of $14,800,000 cumulative preferred stock, convertible 4 per cent series "A" of $100 par value, at the par price. An underwriting group, headed by Edward B. Smith & Co., has agreed to purchase any unsubscribed stock. Funds secured will be used principally in retiring $14,000,000 of 5 per cent debentures.

$90,000,000 Youngstown Issue.

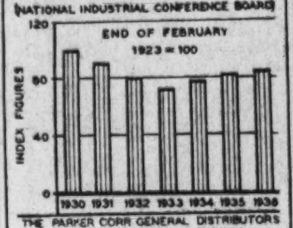
Youngstown, Ohio, April 3 (AP).—Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. filed with the United States Securities Commission today a registration statement covering $90,000,000 of new bonds and convertible debentures for refunding the company's $84,962,000 outstanding first mortgage 5 per cent bonds.

The proposed securities include $60,000,000 of first mortgage bonds maturing in 25 years and $30,000,000 of convertible debentures maturing in 15 years. A special stockholders' meeting authorized the directors to issue up to 600,000 shares of common stock in connection with the convertible debentures.

Canadian Financing.

Toronto, April 3.—Canadian government, provincial and municipal financing during March totaled $57,162,232, greatly exceeding the volume in that month in any of the past five years, according to figures compiled by Wood, Gundy & Co., Ltd. Of this total, $54,406,400 was for refunding purposes and $2,755,832 to provide new capital.

Cost of Living Continues Climb



Boston, Mass., April 3.—There has been a little respite from the steadily upward climb in the cost of living, for the index dropped slightly from January to February. Compared with a year ago, however, the costs of the necessities of life were 2½ per cent greater. Rents made the biggest jump in living costs, going up practically 10 per cent in the past year. Food prices were up 2½ per cent from February, 1935, while clothing prices actually dropped 3 per cent.

Wheat Declines Follow Winnipeg

Chicago, April 3 (AP).—Persistent weakness of May wheat at Winnipeg did much to bring about a lower average of wheat prices. Everywhere today, including season new bottom record. Late rallies of wheat values here resulted, however, from dust-storm reports, together with word that high winds prevailed over the entire Southwest.

Wheat in Chicago closed irregular, ⅜ lower to ⅜ higher, compared with yesterday's finish, May 94½-⅝; corn unchanged to ½ cent down, May 59⅞-60; oats unchanged to ⅛ off, and provisions unchanged to 10 cents decline.

Realty Bonds Reach Highest Since 1933 Low

Average Rises from $218 Per $1,000 to Peak of $408 for March.

New York, April 3.—Statistics compiled by Arnott, Baker & Co. for March showed today that the steady upward climb in real estate bond prices which started in 1933 is continuing. The gain for the month in average prices, based on the market action of 200 typical Eastern issues, was 1.2 per cent.

Average prices, which were at $218 per $1,000 face value at the end of 1933, reached the high of $408 for March. The gain for the month compared favorably with the February rise of 0.8 per cent and raised the total gain for the first quarter of the year to 4.9 per cent.

New York, Philadelphia and Boston issues increased in average prices. The New York issues, which lost 0.5 per cent in February, appreciated 1.3 per cent. The average bid price advanced from $393 to $398.

Philadelphia Leads.

Philadelphia issues made the largest gain of the month, 2.7 per cent. The bid price rose to $378. Boston issues, with a bid price of $572, increased 1.1 per cent.

Pittsburgh issues fell 1.7 per cent, the bid price on March 31 being $287. The decrease was believed to be due in some measure to temporary business reaction to the recent floods. Buffalo priced dropped 1.1 per cent after a February gain of 2.2 per cent.

Theater issues, after a February decrease of 6.1 per cent, resumed their commanding position in the real estate bond market by gaining 14.4 per cent for March. These issues, with an average bid price of $619, are the price leaders.

Office buildings, currently quoted at $466, gained 0.4 per cent for March after a February increase of 5.7 per cent. Other gains were housekeeping apartments, 0.8 per cent, and hotels, 0.6 per cent. Apartment hotels lost 0.9 per cent.

$500,000,000 in Goods Destroyed in Floods

New York, April 3.—Immediate and early purchase orders to replace a substantial portion of $500,000,000 worth of consumers' and capital goods lost or damaged in the floods are indicated in a McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. report completed yesterday by a corps of editors and statisticians working in the 13 States affected.

Telegraphic reports from mill supply houses and field investigators list 185 items of equipment, supplies and materials in urgent demand, not to mention home furnishings and provisions, and farm equipment and supplies.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, April 3 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agric.).—Business in wool on the Boston market was very quiet. Buyers were reported in the market to gather information on wools being offered and the prices asked. It was reported that new fine Arizona wools in original bags were offered to arrive at prices estimated at 87@88 cents scoured basis landed Boston.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent

Stocks Checked by Profit Taking; Motor Shows Higher; Franc and Wheat Drop.

New York, April 3.—Markets lost much of their enthusiasm for the rise, bu h eone was fairly firm. Government bonds found a good demand. Enough stocks were bid up to cover the profit-taking clipping away of prices in other directions, and although the best prices of the day were not maintained through the last hour, the closing was no worse than irregular. Sock turnover fell considerably short of 2,000,000 shares. May wheat closed down a quarter of a cent at 94⅛ cents a bushel.

Motor stocks were the brightest spots in the market. General Motors moved to a new high price and Chrysler was strong above 100. Some of the low priced motors were active. Rails were irregularly lower, with small price changes. Pittsburgh & West Virginia was active at the odd lot post and climbed 2 points to a new high price. Santa Fe was a little lower, for all its heavy cash reserves. The fact that freight car loadings for the roads, as a whole, while rising above the previous week, fell last week below the total of a year ago, may have had something to do with the weakness of that section of the market.

Steel was narrow, but fairly steady until the last hour. Youngstown was strong. Bethlehem sold above 60 for the first time in five years. Motor accessories were strong. Some of the food shares—Biscuit, Corn Products and Standard Brands worked higher. Utilities and oils were firm.

Inflation Again.

The question of inflation was brought forward again by the views expressed yesterday by prominent bankers and economists on the outlook for credit expansion and its control. Several shades of opinion were expressed, but all were in agreement on one point, namely, that the powder is there in great quantity, that it likely will remain for some time, and that matches are in supply.

Observers differ on the matter of control along two main lines. One is whether the means for controlling credit inflation, once it begins, are sufficient. Another is whether, granted the sufficiency of the control is exercised, proper authority will be exerted. A disquieting, from one point of view, point was made in the discussions, which that Treasury consent to reduction in expansion would be necessary. That brings the political factor into the equation and is perhaps the greatest element making for uneasiness.

From the stock speculative point of view the position is favorable, on short term, at least. So long as the danger of inflation is present the stock market will be assured of much support, and if inflation sets in vigorously, a spur to higher stock prices will have been given. Meanwhile the early prospect is for a certain amount of deflation, in one direction at least, assuming that a tax bill will be passed involving a heavy burden on industry. If that burden proves to be too heavy, then the door for inflation will be opened wider, and only a short distance beyond that door lies hard times.

Effects of Devaluation.

Looking abroad the situation continues uncertain. Less warlike talk is heard—excepting in the Far East—but markets are disturbed over the position of the gold bloc countries, war or no war. French currency dropped sharply, but official support came before the franc rate reached the price at which the Bank of France will permit gold shipments. Another export movement of the metal looks, nevertheless, to be inevitable, and that along with the present heavy hoarding of currency in the gold standard countries is working strongly for the devaluationists.

It can only be repeated that the effect on our markets of a departure from gold and a devaluation of the franc by France depends largely on how the trick is turned. If a quick movement is undergone, with sufficient devaluation and a fresh anchorage on gold, the present movement of funds to this country probably would be supplanted by repatriation of foreign money. Holland likely would follow France, and possibly Switzerland would do likewise.

In that case our markets would have a good deal of slack to take up, and enough gold might go eastward to reduce considerably our present heavy excess bank reserves. As a counter to those possibilities we have an unbelievable improvement in business; our cheap money regime scarcely will give way for some time at least to dear money, for we have a mountain of gold that we do not need; a great deal of slack easily can be taken up in the securities markets by domestic investment, in case of a fall in prices; and finally the ending of the gold bloc difficulty might well hasten the day of all round stabilization of currencies on gold, with consequent benefit to our foreign trade.

Brokers' Loans.

Two explanations are offered for the rise of $57,000,000 in brokers' loans for the last week. Probably both are needed to cover so large an increase. First of the month borrowings for purposes other than strictly security operations and borrowing by dealers in new securities contributed to the gain, it is said, and for the remainder the borrowing under the old margin rules was responsible. It is assumed by those who think that the higher margin requirements, which went into effect on April 1, smoked out some money. However, that explanation scarcely would apply unless the would-be borrower also felt that stocks were going higher. The market has improved, true enough, but the strongest set in the tide has come too late to affect the latest brokers' loan account.

United States Steel.

Although directors of United States Steel Corporation will take no action on the preferred dividend until the regular quarterly meeting to be held on April 28, stockholders are hopeful of some word to be given at the annual meeting, set for next Monday. Chairman Myron C. Taylor usually has some things to tell stockholders at the meeting, and it is possible that he might at least give a hint as to how the accumulated dividends on the preferred are to be paid. With the corporation operating at a rate which ensures full coverage of the preferred requirement, expectation now is that the arrearages will be made up from earnings a little at a time.

Freight Traffic Declines For Week and Year

Loading of revnue freight for the week ended March 28 totaled 900,487 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was a decrease of 16,033 cars, or 2.6 per cent below hte corresponding week in 1935 and 9,703 cars, or 1. per cent below the corresponding week in 1934, due in part to flood conditions in certain parts of the country and to seasonal reduction in the movement of coal. Loading of revenue freight for the week of March 28 was an increase of 33,679 cars, or 5.9 per cent above the preceding week.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 157,162 cars, an increase of 9,223 cars above the preceding week, but a reduction of 3,749 cars below the corresponding week in 1935, and 9,008 cars below the same week in 1934.

Coal loading amounted to 96,679 cars, an increase of 13,576 cars above the preceding week, but a reduction of 44,118 cars below the corresponding week in 1935, and 43,392 cars below the same week in 1934.

Grain and grain products loading totaled 29,676 cars, a decrease of 2,692 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 2,695 cars above the corresponding week in 1935, and 2,153 above the same week in 1934. In the Western districts alone, grain and grain products loading for the week ended March 28 totaled 17,688 cars, a decrease of 2,307 cars below the preceding week this year, but an increase of 689 cars above the same week in 1935.

Livestock Gains.

Livestock loading amounted to 12,200 cars, an increase of 17 cars above the preceding week, and 1,171 cars above the same week in 1935 but a decrease of 1,344 cars below the same week in 1934. In the Western district alone, loading of livestock for the week ended March 28, totaled 9,310 cars, a decrease of 199 cars below the preceding week this year but an increase of 748 cars above the same week in 1935.

Forest products loading totaled 29,947 cars, a decrease of 456 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 5,141 cars above the same week in 1935, and 6,166 cars above the same week in 1934.

Coke loading amounted to 6,123 cars, an increase of 297 cars above the preceding week, and 944 cars above the same week in 1935, but a decrease of 1,744 cars below the same week in 1934.

The Eastern, Allegheny, Pocahontas and Southern districts reported decreases in the number of cars loaded with revenue freight, compared with the corresponding week in 1935, but the Northwestern, Central western and Southwestern reported increases. The first four districts named above also reported decreases compared with the corresponding week in 1934, while the creases.

Household Power Gains Cuts Rates for Current

New York, April 3.—Purchases of electric current for household use have increased 43 per cent during the depression, according to the current issue of The Index of the New York Trust Co., and this improvement in consumption contributed to the decline in domestic electric rates.

"While the cost of living at the beginning of 1935 was about 40 per cent above the level of 1913," the bank publication says, "electric rates were 42 per cent below the 1913 level. In the depression period, from 1929 through 1935, there was a steady reduction in the price per kilowatt hour, the index, based on 100 for 1910-1914, falling from 70 to 58. The cost to domestic consumers, in 1935, averaged 5.05 cents per kilowatt hour, constituting a decline of 5.1 per cent from the previous year."

Class I Roads Earn 2.33% Net in 2 Months

Class I railroads of the United States for the first two months of 1936 had a net railway operating income of $69,359,466, which was at the annual rate of return of 2.33 per cent on their property investment, according to reports to the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads, made public yesterday. In the first two months of 1935, their net railway operating income was $48,236,651, or 1.61 per cent on their property investment.

Safety Record Is Set For Dynamite Transport

New York, April 3.—The railroads of the United States and Canada, during 1935, transported approximately 370,000,000 pounds of dynamite and black powder with a safety record of no one killed, none injured, and no property damage.

This safety record for the year has just become known with the publication of the annual report of W. S. Topping, chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives, 30 Vesey street, New York City, which operates under the direction of the Association of American Railroads.

$50,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that tenders are invited for Treasury bills to the amount of $50,000,000, or thereabouts. They will be 273-day bills; and will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders.

Rail President Cites Evils of False Control

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Atlantic City, N. J., April 3.—If the Pennsylvania Railroad had received for work performed the same revenue per ton mile in 1935 that it received in 1921, it would have had over $80,000,000 more net revenue, M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, told the fortieth regular meeting of the Atlantic States Shippers' Advisory Board at the Traymore Hotel here today. He also called attention to the effects of "false economies and false regulation."

The effect on gross and net—all other things being equal—of the gradually declining ton mile rates over the period 1921 to 1935 aggregated over a billion dollars, he said, a sufficient sum to have practically wiped out the bonded debt of the carrier in the hands of the public. Mr. Clement added:

"The entire result of the war period, the period of complete Government control—both as to rates and operation—had the effect of raising the railroads' expenses, raising their operating costs, raising their capital costs, raising their labor costs, and then of leaving them out "on the end of a limb" with high rates and a mark for all their competition. In the meantime, a new method of transportation has developed—transportation by taxation!

"Again, most of the railroad issues have eventually been tied up with legislation, whether a matter of tariff rates, of labor relations, or tax rates; and, as a consequence, it is one industry that, in the last decade, has been very much on the defensive. You are primarily interested in the fact that the industry shall cease being on the defensive. It is an industry that, on the whole, has little to apologize for and nothing to be ashamed of. It is your job and our job to see that the public fully understands the very necessary place that rail transportation occupies in the fitness of things in this country.

Effect of Legislation.

"It is your job and our job to see that the public fully understands all regulatory legislation proposed for these carriers and the ultimate effect thereof. It is your job and our job to see that railroad labor shall have its proper place in the sphere of transportation; that it shall be treated with eminent fairness in all things, bu that it shall be especially privileged in none.

"It is your job and our job to see that the employes, the shippers and the owners understand false economics and false regulation, such as "excess" crew bills, train limit bills, unnecessary inspections and unsound taxation, are not for the good of the industry. And what is not good for the industry is not good for the public which it serves, for the labor which it employs, for its owners and for the shippers who are dependent upon it for transportation.

"The next problem which rail transportation has to meet is its competition. It is your job and it is our job to see that rail carriers shall have equality of opportunity. It is your job and our job to see that these new forms of transportation which are arising in this country shall be so co-ordinated that the public shall receive the best possible service at the lowest cost."

On the Air Today

AL JOLSON is taking another vacation. This time he is being succeeded by Smith Ballew, one-time band leader, orchestra vocalist and now taking a shot at the movies in Hollywood. The program type will not change. Ballew will continue the presentations of outstanding personalities as guests of the "Chateau."

For his opening show, Ballew will have as guests James Cagney, Buster Keaton and Mary Ellis. Keaton promises something entirely new in radio comedy. Miss Ellis will contribute a new number, composed by Victor Young, maestro of the program, entitled "Je Vous Adore."

Ballew, who has sung with George Olson and his orchestra and revives an old friendship with Young, originating in the days when they made phonograph records together, will sing two tunes from a new picture, "Palm Springs," in which he is featured: "I Don't Wanna Make History" and "The Hills of Old Wyoming."

They decided over at WJSV that so much time has elapsed since Warren Sweeney has presented a piano recital that many newcomers to the city are not even aware of his talent. So Announcer Sweeney has been apportioned a half hour tonight, at 7, to demonstrate his talents with Chopin and Beethoven to the Washington listening audience.

NED BRANT—A Story of College Athletics

By Bob Zuppke
Famous Football Coach

YOU HAVE HEARD CARTER'S ATHLETIC DIRECTOR, MR. MEEGAN, AND COACH BRANT SAY THEIR SCHOOL WILL ACCEPT THE BOARD'S RULING ON WHETHER RED LIGHT'S SO-CALLED SNAKE BALL SHALL BE BARRED IN THE BIG EIGHT
BY UNANIMOUS AGREEMENT, THE BOARD IS NOT GOING TO RULE—IT IS GOING TO ASK CARTER COLLEGE TO MAKE THE DECISION
EXCUSE ME, GENTLEMEN—I GUESS I'M OUT OF ORDER HERE, BUT MAY I SAY A WORD BEFORE YOU GO ANY FARTHER?
CAN RED'S APPEARANCE SAVE HIS SNAKE BALL?

APPLE MARY

By Martha Orr

SOMEONE WANTS TO SPEAK TO YOU ON THE PHONE, MRS. WORTH.
IF IT'S OLD LOOTER, GRANMA, TELL HIM TO JUMP IN THE RIVER.
I'LL BET LOOTER IS MAD BECAUSE I TOOK HIS OLD PAPER, AND LOCKED HIM UP IN HIS OWN ROOM. IF HE COMES HERE, BILL AND ME WILL FIX HIS CLOCK.
THE IDEA, THAT IMPERTINENT CROOK, LOOTER, I NEVER HEARD SUCH LANGUAGE IN MY LIFE. HE'S COMING HERE. SAYS IF WE DON'T GIVE UP THAT PAPER, HE'S GOING TO DO SOMETHING AWFUL.
I'M GOING TO GET BILL—
NO, YOU DON'T. I'M EQUAL TO THAT LOOTER, AND I'M GOING TO 'TEND TO HIM MYSELF.

Culbertson on Bridge

(Mr. Culbertson is acting as referee in a set game between two married couples. He fines the players according to the degree of error. Today's hand is the fifth one of the match.)

It didn't require an expert on feminine psychology to perceive that the charming Mrs. White was smarting under the sting of the fine I had imposed on the hand just played. I offered a short but fervent prayer that I wouldn't have to penalize her again for at least several hands. I had the uneasy feeling that if I did I might regret it. She had red hair.

Her husband either overlooked or deliberately ignored the danger signals.

I was surprised that he wasn't burned by the glare directed at him. The next hand was dealt in complete silence.

South, dealer.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 no trump	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump (final bid)

West opened the queen of diamonds and Mrs. White won with the ace. She then crossed to dummy's spade queen, led the queen of clubs, and finessed. West's lone king won and the natural shift to the heart queen followed. Dummy covered and East rattled off five heart tricks. The contract was down two, and I knew I was in for it!

SOUTH [Mrs. White]

"Sorry, Mrs. White," I said (not without a quaver in my voice), "but you failed to make a safety play on that hand. I'll have to fine you $5."

"Is that so?" she said, dangerously calm. "And what should I have done, may I ask?"

"You should have laid down the club ace on the bare chance that West had the singleton king. It was unimportant if the play set up the king in East's hand. He could not lead through the danger suit, hearts. Any precaution, however slight, that you could take against West getting on lead should have been taken."

"So now I'm supposed to drop singleton kings! Well, really! I thought our referee was a bridge authority, not a fortune teller!"

I slumped lower in my chair. It was scant comfort to reflect that I had seen it coming!

'Unreality' Topic Of Lesson-Sermon

"Unreality" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The golden text is from I Timothy, 6:17: "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." (James 4:7.)

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Resisting evil, you overcome it and prove its nothingness."

WEAR-LONG WORSTED

Knit-Tex

$25

You'll buy it for Easter, to wear as a complement to your Saxon-Weave suit. Perhaps you'll have no other purpose in mind. But here's what you're going to discover about this unusual coat . . . you grow fonder of it the longer you wear it; on warm days you'll hardly know you're wearing a coat; on cool days it will wrap you in warmth; it will shed spring rains with ease; it will hardly ever wrinkle; you will wear it more frequently than any other coat and you will hate to discard it. A lot to claim for a coat, but KNIT-TEX is a lot of coat, especially for $25.
